Hughes estate worth less than half the original estimates?

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Howard Hughes estate is worth less than half the widely reported estimates of between $1.5 billion and $2.5 billion, according to the Philadelphia Inquirer.

In addition, it is possible that as little as $100 million to $200 of the estate will ever be distributed to relatives and heirs, the Inquirer said in a copyright story in Sunday's editions.

A spokesman for Summa Corp., the major holding company for Hughes' assets, said he could not comment on the Inquirer's report.

But the spokesman, Arelo Sederberg, then added: "I don't know where the Philadelphia Inquirer gets its figures. Summa never puts out figures. It's a privately owned corporation. Can't imagine where they'd get such figures. No, I can't imagine them coming up with such figures."

The Inquirer said if none of the purported Hughes' wills proves to be authentic the estate would be all but eliminated by federal estate taxes, legal fees and administrative taxes.

It is estimated that taxes, plus interest payments on taxes, will range upward of a half-billion dollars, the newspaper said.

The Inquirer said it conducted a financial analysis that put the value of the Hughes fortune at between $600 million and $1 billion. The figure is considerably less than earlier published reports, the newspaper said, because of losses Hughes incurred shortly before his death April 5.

For example, Hughes sustained multimillion-dollar losses from his investments in hotels, casinos, and his helicopter manufacturing plant in the late 1960s and early 1970s, according to the Inquirer.

Sederberg admitted there were some losses in Nevada in the late 1960s and in 1970, "but that's all been turned around and, truthfully, the company is having one of its better years this year."

Levi will not intervene in Boston school busing issue

WASHINGTON (AP) — Atty. Gen. Edward H. Levi will stay out of the Boston school busing case for now but may ask the Supreme Court later to restrict the scope of court-ordered desegregation remedies, the Justice Department said Saturday.

Levi and Solicitor General Robert H. Bork refused to explain their reasons for deciding against intervening in the Boston case.

But they said if the court agrees to review it, the department will file a brief as it does in virtually all desegregation cases before the high court.

In a department brief in the Boston case or any other school case, the department will take the position that busing or any other tool of desegregation should be restricted, Bork told reporters.

"The remedies should be tailored to the violation," Bork said.

He said the department position would encompass a wide range of desegregation methods, rather than busing alone.

Bork insisted that the decision to stay out of the Boston case now was made "on entirely legal grounds," and that political considerations played no part at all.

President Ford had been accused by some Democrats of raising the issue for political reasons before he faced a primary election in Kentucky and Tennessee, where busing had been a matter of controversy. He denied the allegation as he won those elections last Tuesday.

Ford issued a statement Saturday saying that he respected Levi's decision. But he directed the attorney general "to continue an active search for a busing case which would be suitable for judicial review of current case law on forced school busing."

Ford also pushed Levi "to develop legislative remedies to minimize forced school busing."

The President promised to send a message to Congress recommending such legislation soon.

"I believe that ways can be found to minimize forced busing while also remaining true to the nation's ideals and our educational goals," the President said.

In Boston, civil rights leaders praised Levi's decision, while antibusing forces assailed it.

Mayor Kevin White, who wants a Supreme Court review of the the city's court-ordered desegregation plan, said, "I am surprised at the attorney general's decision, but it will not affect my own suit ..."

Asked if the latest development might touch off a new wave of violence in Boston, White said, "It shouldn't. There's no excuse for that."

But antibusing leader Louise Day Hicks said Levi's announcement might make the people of Boston "lose their heads."

"The decision of the attorney general is the result of political pressure," said Mrs. Hicks, the Boston City Council president. "It's a victory for the highpressured hypocrites who abound in Washington. President Gerald Ford is a fraud. This is an anti-white decision."

Thomas I. Atkins, president of the Boston chapter of the NAACP, applauded Levi's decision. "The significance of the attorney general's statement is that he has resisted the effort by the President to manipulate and politicize the U.S. Supreme Court," he said.

At his news briefing, Bork remarked, "I don't know why the focus is on busing."

He said the department "recognizes that busing is a proper remedy under certain circumstances. We have not said anything about any particular type of remedy."

He and other department officials do not intend to challenge merely the use of busing in any brief before the Supreme Court, he said. Instead, the department would argue that federal judges should impose only enough busing or other remedies to correct whatever past segregation was due to official acts of local school boards or other government agencies.

Not now, but may go to high court later

U.S. nuclear plants on alert

Security, tightened, but no reason given

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has issued a security alert for all 58 nuclear power plants across the nation for the Memorial Day weekend, an NRC spokesman said Saturday.

One power company official said the NRC notification of an alert mentioned the fact an NRC agent lost his identification, and police warned in a separate communication that a midget submarine had been stolen.

Another official contacted in a spot check of nuclear plants said radical activity had prompted the alert.

The NRC spokesman described the alert as "low-level" and said the agency received "highly tentative and inconclusive" information indicating security should be tightened for the next several days.

He declined to discuss the nature or source of the information, adding that such alerts have taken place previously. He did not give a reason for the alert but laughed at the submarine report and said the missing identification, stolen in a motel burglary, was not the reason either.

In general, t·e spokesman said, operators of nuclear plants were advised to have their guards exercise additional care, particularly in checking people entering the plants.

Also, plant operators were advised to maintain communications with law enforcement agencies in the event of any problems, he said.

The spokesman, Frank Ingram, said he knew nothing of a report that the security alert was prompted by word that anti-nuclear extremists might try to occupy one of the facilities this weekend.

In an internal NRC memorandum that came to light a month ago, the commission's safety chief acknowledged that "some or even many" U.S. nuclear facilities may not be able to withstand attack by as few as three armed intruders.

Wendall Johnson, head of security for the Yankee Atomic Power Corp., stressed that the alert was advisory and not an order. He said the NRC action was apparently sparked by rumors of radical activity.

"My intepretation is that we should be on the alert for any possible problems. As far as I know it's just rumors, nothing specific," he said.

Johnson, who directs security at three New England plants — Vermont Yankee in Vernon, Vt., Maine Yankee in Wiscasset and the Rowe, Mass., plant — declined to say what specific steps were taken to tighten security.

He said the May 11 bombing of the Central Maine Power Co. in Augusta had already put industry nerves on edge. No one was injured. The Fred Hampton Unit of the People's Forces claimed responsibility for the bombing. The FBI said it had not heard of the political group named after a slain Black Panther leader.

Delay in naming new school chief

By PHYLLIS CANNON
PB Staff Writer

The Pomona school board, in a schedule change announced Saturday, will delay until June 8 the naming of a new superintendent of schools.

Acting Schools Supt. Sidney G. Moses said he was called by the board about 11 p.m. Friday and instructed to delay the entire agenda originally scheduled for Tuesday until June 8 with the exception of one personnel item.

It is now the intent of the board, Moses said, to meet in executive session at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday for several hours.

This time, Moses explained, will be spent reviewing evaluations of candidates interviewed for the superintendency, and studying the written evaluations submitted by the 17-member superintendent selection advisory committee.

Following this executive study session, the board plans to go into public session just long enough to take action on the recommendation that the employment of a teacher be terminated.

The full agenda initially intended for Tuesday but now postponed to June 8 is a lengthy one and does include the appointment of a superintendent as one item.

It was printed and distributed before the school board and completed interviewing the last candidate Friday night. Moses said it was following that interview that the board decided it needed another

Valley to mark holiday with rites

Memorial Day services will be conducted throughout the valley Monday as local residents pause to honor servicemen killed in conflict.

The day also will be a holiday for government workers, as city, county, state and federal offices will be closed. Banks will shut their doors and there will be no regular mail delivery. Most businesses are expected to close, although some will remain open.

School districts in the area also will observe the holiday, and trash collections in most cities are expected to be a day late for the entire week as sanitation crews take the day off. One exception will be Hohnstein Disposal Service in Montclair which will continue regular pickups Monday.

Local politicians also will enjoy a holiday from city council and school board meetings. In Pomona, however, the regular Monday council meeting has been rescheduled to Tuesday night at 8.

Most post offices will be open for access to lock boxes and vending machines, but the only mail handled during the day will be special delivery, according to postal officials.

Memorial Day services in Pomona will be conducted by the American

Five arrested in assault on two school officials

Two adults and three juveniles have been arrested by Pomona police following an alleged assault on the principal and assistant principal of a Pomona junior high school.

According to police, the incident occurred Friday at Marshall Junior High School apparently over the suspension of two of the juveniles arrested in the altercation.

Police gave this account.

At about 9 a.m. a 13-year-old female student and a 14-year-old male student at the school allegedly caused a disruption of classes when they walked down a school corridor in a boisterous manner while bouncing a basketball.

They were approached by Principal Jack Housen and Gene Bynum, assistant princiapl, and ordered to cease the disruptive behavior. They were apparently told they were to be suspended for their conduct.

At about noon, the students retured to the school with two female adults and confronted Housen and Bynum in the school office.

A verbal, finger-shaking argument was followed by a physical fight between the school officials and the adults and juveniles, police reported. Housen suffered an eye injury when hit by a thrown metal pencil charpener.

When police arrived at the scene, another confrontation occurred on the campus between the police and the two female adults and the two juveniles. Fighting again broke out and five officers were needed to quell the disturbance.

Arrested for assault on a police officer, resisting arrest and causing a disturbance on school grounds were Doris Braswell, 28, of 2123 W. Orange Grove Ave., Pomona, and Pearline Collins, 33, of 1180 Cromwell St. Also arrested were the two juveniles and another 13-year-old boy.

The three juveniles arrested shared the same residential addresses as the two women.

One officer suffered injury when he was bitten on the hand during the fighting.

Compromise could send prices soaring

$17.5 billion gas hike?

WASHINGTON (AP) — A compromise natural gas deregulation bill headed for Senate action could send gas prices to consumers soaring by as much as $17.5 billion over the next three years, a new congressional study said Saturday.

The study by the Library of Congress is the first formal estimate of what the measure would cost. The bill, which has broad backing in the Senate, was designed to break a months-long impasse over natural gas deregulation.

It would maintain some price limits and phase out others.

If enacted, consumers could expect to pay $10 billion more for natural gas by 1977 and $17.5 billion by 1979, the study said. It made no attempt to relate this increase directly to homeowners who use natural gas for heating or cooking. However earlier Senate Commerce Committee staff members estimated increases to most consumers of 10 to 15 per cent a year.

Natural gas sold on the interstate market is now regulated by the federal government at 52 cents per thousand cubic feet. The gas industry wants all price limits removed, claiming that the price now is held so low that there is no incentive for exploring for new gas reserves.

The Senate last fall passed a bill to gradually eliminate these controls. But the House turned around and earlier this year voted to broaden the limits over major producers. These conflicting versions produced a congressional deadlock the new compromise was designed to shake loose.

Its chances of passage in the Senate are generally viewed as good, since it is endorsed by several leading senators who formerly opposed any form of deregulation.

The new measure would keep existing ceilings on "old" gas, drilled from existing wells. It would set a new maximum of $1.60 per thousand cubic feet for new on-shore production, a ceiling that could rise to reflect inflation and which would be eliminated entirely after seven years. For new offshore production, the new limit would be $1.35 per thousand cubic feet.

Rep. John Moss, D-Calif., and Sen. John Durkin, D-N.H., sought the Library of Congress study. Durkin said he objected to the way the bill was "shot through the Senate Commerce Committee without benefit of a single hearing or piece of testimony." That panel approved the compromise on May 18 by a vote of 16 to 1. Durkin cast the lone dissent.

The study also questioned the bill's way of allowing producers to claim gas produced from wells in extensions of previously discovered reservoirs as high-priced "new" gas. This could allow a lot of gas to be priced as new when it would otherwise be regarded as "old" gas.

Moss and Durkin, in a joint statement, said this provision is a "glaring loophole."

Ellis Island—65 years later

ELLIS ISLAND REOPENED

A National Park Service ranger describes the medical room on Ellis Island to a tour group Saturday. The island once served as a reception center for millions of immigrants.

NEW YORK (AP) — Samuel Weiss looked up at the sunlight pouring in through the cracked windows in the old immigration center and said, "It is so different. In 65 years it is so changed. It is so broken up."

In 1911, Weiss, an 18-year-old hat maker from czarist Russia, came to Ellis Island on his way to becoming a citizen of the United States.

He returned to Ellis Island on Saturday, on the first boatload of tourists to visit the immigration center since it shut down in 1954.

In the past 22 years, the red brick buildings on the 27-acre island almost in the hadow of the Statue of Liberty have been neglected and vandalized. Ceilings caved in, electrical wiring fell in great loops in dark rooms where floors were heaped with forgotten files and the skeletons of small birds. Thieves tore out the copper wiring and brass pipes.

Most of the neglect and damage are still visible, although work crews have removed loose plaster and portable generators have restored limited electricty.

"This place is like a person," the 84-year-old Weiss said as he followed a guided tour led by National Park Service staffers. "When you get old, this is what happens. Everything gets broken up."

Weiss, who lives in Brooklyn with his wife of 61 years, recalled the few hours he spent on Ellis Island before he was admitted to the United States.

"I was so tired. I was so scared. I was so seasick from 17 days on the boat. I wanted so much to be in a free country. I come from the boat to this room. It had that smell, the intelligence, the freedom, the smile. It was a pleasure."

Weiss had one small problem as he waited to be questioned by immigration inspectors: He didn't have enough money to prove that he could support himself until he found work.

"It came my turn, and I heard that you had to have $25. I only have $20. You see, I play cards, and I lost a little in the cards. I won a little, too, but I was still short $5.

"I mentioned that I only got $20, so they ask me if my brothers who are already here can help me out. Of course they are very well off. They are in America. So it is okay, as long as I got $20," Weiss said.

The Park Service will conduct hour-long tours five or six times every day until Oct. 30.

week in which to make another decision.

Written evaluations submitted by the advisory committee were not to be presented to the board until Tuesday, one committee member said Friday.

Some dissatisfaction was voiced Friday over the role that committee members were permitted to play in the selection process.

Committee members were selected by the school board. They represented community organizations and employe groups within the district.

Three of these employe groups — Black Employes Association (BEA), Association of Mexican American (AMAE) Association for Women's Abilities and Rights in Education (AWARE) Friday circulated a memo expressing "grave concerns" with the entire selection process. The district Bilingual Parents added a signature to this memo. Other minority members of the committee were distressed with what they said appeared to be the elimination of minority applicants for the position, and they questioned the usefulness of the part they were allowed to take in screening the top six candidates.

The student population in the Pomona school district, they noted, is 55 per cent minority, yet only one of the final six applicants interviewed for the superintendency by the advisory committee was a minority person.

Driver dies in crash a block from home

A San Dimas resident was killed only a block from his home early Saturday morning when his car rolled over, pinning him underneath.

According to Los Angeles County sheriff's deputies, Ronald Lee Hovermale, 23, of 752 W. Gladstone St., died of multiple injuries shortly after the 12:45 a.m. accident. He was dead at the scene.

Deputies said Hovermale's car rolled over in the front yard of a home at 627 W. Gladstone St., but they were unable to account for the cause of the accident, which is still under investigation.

Pomona man held in rape of girl, 7

A 27-year-old Pomona man was arrested Friday night on suspicion of raping a 7-year-old girl.

Police said the man, Ira James Walker, of 2279 Kellogg Park Drive, was a "walk away" from Norwalk Mental Hospital where he was undergoing treatment.

He was arrested for allegedly raping a 7year-old girl in her home in the 1000 block of S. Hamilton Ave. The attack was reportedly witnessed by the girl's young brothers and sisters.

Milk not really kind to stomach ulcers

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Milk reduces stomach acid and discomfort for ulcer patients, but a new study shows that milk provides only temporary relief and eventually results in higher acid secretions that may further damage painful ulcers, researchers say.

A study of 10 ulcer and nonulcer patients at Wadsworth Veterans Administration Hospital in Los Angeles shows that "milk may be detrimental to ulcer healing," said Dr. John I. Isenberg.

Isenberg, attending the Digestive Disease Week conference here, said researchers found that there was a brief decrease in acid levels of subjects who consumed milk, but a marked increase in acid secretion occurred within four hours.

He said the acid levels increased as much as three times above normal, and the increase was caused by whole, low-fat and nonfat milk.

Doctors believe excess acid production is a major cause of ulcers.

"We are not recommending that ulcer patients stop drinking milk," he said. "But we are saying that doctors should not prescribe milk instead of antacids in treatment."

Gastric terminology provides a bellyful

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Let's say you suffer from, as the commercials say, the distress of stomach gas. You found yourself in Miami Beach this week with nothing better to do than attend a convention of digestive system experts.

At an affair called Digestive Disease Week, hundreds of medical experts presented brief papers on various digestive system ailments. But would you find the answers you're seeking?

How about "The Duodenum is an Integrator and an Amplifier: H plus Ion Load Drives Pancreatic Bicarbonate Secretion?" Or "Mechanisms of Lower Esophageal Sphincter Pressure Increase in Response to Gastric Pressure Increments?"

The same sort of trouble arises with "Effect of Prostaglandin E2 and 16, 16-Dimethyl PGE2 on Gastric Acid Secretion and Blood Flow" and "Morphological and Kinetic Features of Gastrointestinal Cancer Xenografts in the Nude Mouse." The nude mouse part was comprehended.

In the "Effect of Serotonin on Rabbit Jejunal and Ileal H2O and Electrolyte Transport,' it doesn't take much to figure out that H2O is water, but you're on your own with the rest of it.

Finally, late Thursday — the last day of the convention — it was there: "Studies of Intestinal Gas After Ingestion of a Standard Meal."

Several doctors from Minnesota presented a brief report on a study of stomach gas. Their conclusion?

"Sensations interpreted as indicative of gas arise from disordered motility which may be aggravated by food ingestion."

A 'digest' of the day's news

Man definitely had a castiron stomach

NEW YORK (AP) — After operating for two hours, doctors at Metropolitan Hospital removed 500 metal objects of varying sizes from the stomach of a 155-pound man.

The objects included more than 300 coins and subway tokens, broken thermometers, can openers, spoons, knives, forks, nuts, bolts, chains and car keys.

The 38-year-old man, whose name was not released, is a psychiatric patient at the Manhattan State Hospital. He was transfered to Metropolitan for examination of an abdominal mass. The examining physician said the man's stomach was distended and it was suspected that he had a large tumor.

X-rays revealed the man's stomach was littered with metallic debris.

The patient had complained of abdominal pains, but reportedly had an enormous appetite and often ate double portions at meals.

Surgeons said the patient suffered no damage to his esophagus or intestinal tract and is in good condition.

The doctors put the man on a restricted diet.

GETTING READY — Ken Burgess brought 30 pounds of sugar, 25 pounds of cracked corn and three pounds of yeast this year to the Moonshine Festival in New Straitsville, Ohio. It is to be combined with water to demonstrate how to set mash.

If it's Memorial Day, it must be moonshine time

NEW STRAITSVILLE, Ohio (AP) — This community, called the Moonshine Capital of the World during prohibition, is honoring its past and the clearest sippin' whisky any bootlegger ever carried.

For the fifth year in a row, the town is celebrating Memorial Day with a Moonshine Festival in an attempt to restore the town's fame and fortune, both of which have dwindled over the years as steadily as its population.

"The moonshine and the bootlegging is nothing to be proud of, but there's nothing wrong with it, either," said Mayor Don Brown. "It's a resource just like the coal hereabouts."

The distilling art has flourished for decades in the hills and stubble brush of Mahoning, Ashtabula, Lawrence and Scioto counties, but residents credit New Straitsville's emergence as the 1920s wet capital of the Midwest to an act of anger.

Legend has it that on Oct. 13, 1884, during one of the bitterest coal strikes in memory here, outraged mine workers piled timber in mine cars, drenched the wood with oil, threw in a torch and shoved the cars down the black mouth of the Plumber Hill mine. Fed by tons of coal that would never be mined, the flames spread for miles underground.

The fire cut into mining in the Perry County hills, and when the depression came, men without an income found bootlegging an attractive alternative.

The miners who knew the burned out shafts often set up their stills deep in the caves where outsiders feared to tread. Those who are listened to here say the water from mountain springs filtering down through hundreds of square miles of charred coal gave "Straitsville Straight" its unique color and taste.

Until repeal in 1932, still operators and their retailers carried their receipts to the bank in suitcases, the old-timers say.

"Had it not been for the moonshine industry in the 1920s, there wouldn't be any New Straitsville today," said Betty St. Clair, daughter of the late Alf Matthews, owner of the busiest cafe in town.

"Everybody in town was connected with moonshine," she said. "My father aged it in charcoal barrels atop the hot-air radiator."

The state has sent two agents to chaperone a still on display and to answer questions. They tell festival goers that cooking the mash in metal containers or piping the fermented product through lead fittings can produce a lethal brew.

Ken Burgess, whose fringe association with the festival at its birth has turned into nearly a full-time job, bought 30 pounds of sugar, 25 pounds of cracked corn and three pounds of yeast this year to be combined with water in a demonstration of how to set a mash.

Some of the folk across the street at Matthews' say the liquor control boys are really here to see the mash is dumped before it is distilled into more moonshine.

Developed by Volvo

Significant breakthrough achieved in antismog car

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Volvo has developed a nearly pollution-free car with improved mileage that will be sold in California later this year, the state Air Resources Board said Saturday.

ARB Chairman Tom Quinn called the new car, which uses an American-made catalytic converter, the "most significant breakthrough ever achieved" in the effort to reduce smog emissions from automobiles.

Quinn told a news conference here that the new Volvo "in addition to being nearly smogfree, actually gets 10 per cent better mileage than current models."

Quinn said the new Volvo has completed lengthy tests required by the ARB and the federal Environmental Protection Agency.

"We were astounded by the results, which show that within the next decade we can nearly eliminate the automobile as a major cause of smog," he said.

The new smog-control system was designed for Volvo by Engelhard Industries of Edison, N.J. The ARB estimated the cost of the device, a "threeway" catalytic converter, at between $25 and $50 per car but said the price would go down with mass production.

Quinn said the new Volvo is 10 times cleaner than cars sold in most of the nation and seven times cleaner than cars currently sold in California, which has more stringent emission requirements. He said the new system was discovered inadvertantly.

"Volvo was trying to develop an emissions system to meet California's stringent 1977 smog standards and at the same time improve fuel economy," he said. "Volvo had no idea that its new control system would result in a nearly pollution-free car."

California's anti-smog rules, already the nation's toughest, will be further stiffened next year. Quinn said most auto manufacturers have developed systems that meet the state's new requirements but that Volvo's exceeded the rules by a wide margin.

Quinn also accused President Ford and domestic automakers of attempting to weaken existing smog requirements.

"President Ford and the auto companies have joined in an effort to weaken the Clean Air Act and roll back smog standards," he said. "This exciting new development proves that we can get clean, fuel-efficient cars if we keep the pressure on the automakers."

Quinn said it was the first converter to control all three kinds of automobile pollution: hydrocarbon, carbon monoxide and oxides of nitrogen. The conventional system is an oxidation catalyst which reduced only hydrocarbons and carbon monoxide, he said.

The new catalyst uses small amounts of platinum and other noble metals which Quinn said enables it to reduce all three pollutants.

In addition, the engine has fuel injection with a metered fuel system that includes a variable air-fuel ratio.

Quinn said he expected the catalyst would work with cars with conventional carburetors but it would require the metered fuel system.

S. Africa picks French group to build nuclear plant

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — South Africa announced Saturday it has selected a French consortium over a U.S.-led group for a controversial $1-billion project to build the nation's first nuclear power station.

The French won the contract over a group of American, Swiss and Dutch firms that had faced strong domestic opposition to the scheme because of South Africa's race policies and also because Pretoria has not signed the nuclear nonproliferation treaty.

Informed sources said government officials here were furious about the opposition, especially in the United States and the Netherlands. But there was no indication whether this played a role in the selection of the French group.

Officials said the U.S.-Swiss-Dutch group was rejected because of the failure of the Dutch government to provide necessary guarantees and assurances by May 21. The Electricity Supply Commission said it suspended negotiations last Monday with the consortium of General Electric, Brown Bovari of Switzerland and Ryn-Schelde-Verolme of Holland.

The officials said the contract for the construction of the two-unit power station, about 17 miles north of Cape Town, was awarded to the French consortium of Framatome, Alsthom and Spie Batignolles.

A third group bidding for the contract was Kraftwerk Union of West Germany in collaboration with Murray and Roberts of South Africa.

The U.S.-led group had been regarded as the front-runner for the contract until political controversy erupted over the project. GE had already applied to the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission for the licenses needed to ship plutonium for the plants to South Africa.

The project's opponents said the two proposed reactors would produce about 1,000 pounds of plutonium a year, enough for 100 atomic bombs the size of the one dropped on Nagasaki, Japan.

South Africa's nuclear capacity is already considered more advanced than that of India, which exploded its first nuclear device in 1974.

Some U.S. congressional opponents of the deal said it would undermine America's declared policy of support for black majorities in southern Africa.

Sen. Dick Clark, D-Iowa, chairman of the Senate African affairs subcommittee, said last week black African leaders would view it as "a signal that the United States hasn't really changed its African policy at all and has no intention of doing so. I think this will only increase the potential for violence and bloodshed in southern Africa."

Three American environmental groups — the Sierra Club, the Natural Resources Defense Council and the Union of Concerned Scientists — filed a petition with the Nuclear Regulatory Commission asking that GE be denied licenses to export plutonium for the plants.

The U.S. State Department had no comment on the announcement. General Electric officials were unavailable.

The South African announcement said Framatome will supply the nuclear reactors and Alsthom the turbogenerators while Spie Batignolles will be responsible for engineering, South African officials said.

The power station will consist of two pressurized water reactors, each with an electrical output of 922 megawatts. The first unit is scheduled for commissioning in November 1982, the second a year later.

Ontario man found dead in driveway of neighbor

A 23-year-old Ontario hod carrier has been listed as a suicide after a neighbor discovered the man's body in a driveway Saturday morning.

Ontario police said that John Pierre Limong evidentally shot himself in the head with a Ruger .357 magnum revolver.

James M. Sweeney, 928 E. J St., Ontario, told officers he discovered the body of Limong lying in Sweeney's driveway when he returned home from an errand about 9:56 a.m.

A large amount of blood covered the ground around Limong's head. A gun was found under his arm.

Limong was fully clothed.

Halyard Garver, 27, also a hod carrier, said that Limong had lived with him at 922 E. J St., for about three weeks, and had been working for him parttime.

Garver said that he fell asleep about 6 p.m. Friday, and when he woke up at 9:30 p.m. he discovered his gun and Limong gone.

He said he visited a couple of bars that Limong frequented but couldn't find him.

He went to the Ontario police station and reported the theft of the gun. He told officers he heard no shots during the night.

Ontario police discovered that Garver had two outstanding warrants against him and arrested him. Bail was set at $707.

Finch throws own punch as Tunney, Hayden mix it up in Senate fight

Sen. John Tunney and his Democratic rival, Tom Hayden, are sparring over national defense, and Republican challenger Robert Finch is critical of Tunney for missing a Senate vote on the B1 bomber.

Meanwhile, Tunney and Hayden negotiated Saturday on details of their debate, planned for next Friday or Saturday, with the site, format and broadcast arrangements still undetermined.

The Democratic senator fired the first shot on defense Friday, saying Hayden is making a "reckless and irresponsible" proposal to cut U.S. military forces in half.

A Hayden spokesman said Saturday Tunney was overstating Hayden's proposals, and criticized Tunney for supporting the B1 bomber, which Hayden opposes.

And Finch questioned Tunney's support of the B1, noting that Tunney was absent this week when the Senate voted to put off a decision on the supersonic bomber until next February.

"If John Tunney had any skill he could have changed three votes in the Senate, plus his own vote, and saved the B1 decision from being put off until next year," said Finch, a former lieutenant governor and one of four GOP contenders in the June 8 primary.

The other three are John Harmer, S.I. Hayakawa and Alphonzo Bell.

Finch said the issue is vital to California's economy, and accused Tunney of having an "infamous absentee record" in the Senate.

A Tunney spokesman, Hadley Roff, said Tunney had just left Washington for California and had "no advance warning" that the B1 vote was upcoming.

"The Senate is sometimes capricious," Roff said.

At campaign stops in San Francisco and Sacramento Friday, Tunney assailed defense proposals outlined in Hayden's campaign tome, "The Future Is Ours."

Tunney said he had analyzed the proposals and concluded they would cut the army by 58 per cent and the navy and air force by 51 per cent and eliminate nearly 2.6 million jobs.

Hayden's plans, Tunney said, would "dismantle our national defenses...disrupt important alliances...(and) disrupt our economy."

Humphrey recalls his 'longest day'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Election Day, 1968. "The longest day of my life," recalls Hubert H. Humphrey.

It was the day he nearly won the presidency. A day to think about the people and issues that had helped his campaign and the ones that hadn't.

In his autobiography, "The Education of A Public Man," to be published next week, Humphrey wrote:

"It was a day when every minute lingered, when time was suspended, when suddenly there was nothing more to do after months on a treadmill, when fatigue finally overwhelmed me."

More than 73 million Americans voted that day and Humphrey lost to Richard M. Nixon by about 510,000 votes.

Humphrey recalled some of the names that went through his mind while he waited for the election results and what his thoughts were:

"Jesse Unruh ... he proved so often that he can't be trusted ... Gene McCarthy could have helped. I thought we had an understanding but he didn't deliver ...

"Clark Clifford would make a fine secretary of state ... I wonder how Ed Muskie is doing. What a job he's done. What a wonderful guy ... Henry Kissinger should be in the White House ...

"Ted Kennedy. He had so many reasons not to help, but he really gave ... Imagine a guy like Wallace getting so many votes. North. South. Everywhere. Such an ugly part of American politics."

And finally the results were in:

"To lose to Nixon. Ye Gods! No warmth, no strength, no emotion, no spirit. No heart."

Humphrey started for the hall where he would admit to the nation he had lost:

"This is the worst moment of my life. What a disappointment to have failed. We could have won it. We should have won it."

One name and one issue overshadowed all of Humphrey's recollections of that campaign: Lyndon B. Johnson and the Vietnam war.

During the four years Humphrey served as vice president under Johnson, American involvement in the war had escalated and as antiwar sentiment grew, Humphrey came under pressure to repudiate Johnson's position on the war.

"I had a choice," wrote Humphrey. "Break with the President and be denounced as irresponsible. Or muddle through. Really no choice if I wanted to be President."

As for Johnson, Humphrey described his as "impossible on the war ...

"Wonder why Johnson shot me down when I said that troops would be withdrawn in 1969? I was right. I got the information from the White House. Ruined my credibility, made me look like a damn fool. It hurt. Never really recovered from that."

1.2 million register for jobs

SACRAMENTO (AP) — About 1.2 million jobseekers registered with the state in the first 10 months of this fiscal year when 397,283 were placed in jobs, officials say.

The Employment Development Department said the active file of new or renewed applications totalled 644,037 persons on April 30, including 54,006 Vietnam war veterans.

EDD's 170 field offices throughout the state averaged 39,728 job placements in the first 10 months of 1975-76, compared to an average of 41,721 for the same period last year.

A good supply of dust can prevent a glowing sunset. When sunlight, comprised of light from various colored wavelengths, bumps into the atmosphere's dust particles, the component parts are scattered and deflected. Political interests at YTS not unusual

The 116 wards of the California Youth Training School in Chino who registered to vote in upcoming elections appear to line up politically much the same as citizens of the state in general.

The results of a voter registration drive conducted recently at the youth facility showed 116 of 900 wards chose to register. Of those, 27 per cent registered as Republicans and 55.2 percent registered as Democrats. Of the remainder; 4.3 percent declined to state political affiliation; 2.5 percent registered with the American Independent Party; and one percent in the Peace and Freedom Party.

Statewide registration totals show 56.8 percent of residents registered as Democrats and 36.9 percent as Republicans.

The YTS wards have been told that if they plan to vote in the June 8 primaries they will need to obtain absentee ballots from their county of residence if they are still incarcerated at that time. time.

Most of the wards at YTS range in age from 18 to 23.

Superior Court takes Pomonans

A Pomona couple has been ordered into Imperial County Superior Court on charges of murdering Ronald Lee Hunziker Dec. 5 in the desert near Blythe.

The couple was bound over by Desert Municipal Court Judge W. Stuart Miller at the close of two-day preliminary hearing in Blythe. Miller scheduled their arraignment in Indio June 10 and ordered them to remain in jail in lieu of $250,000 bail each.

The defendants, Richard Ray Taylor, 23, 1400 S. Reservoir St., and Marie Elaine Matzka, 22, 2409 Chanslor St., are accused of murdering Hunziker, 25, 1175 E. Grand Ave., Pomona, dismembering his body about 10 miles from Blythe. A 15-year-old Pomona youth also accused in the slaying is being handled by Imperial County juvenile authorities.

Investigators charged that Hunziker was slain while driving the others to Oklahoma. He had planned to continue on to Wisconsin to visit relatives over the Christmas holidays, they said.

His body was discovered April 10, climaxing an investigation which began a few days before after a friend told Pomona police he never arrived in Wisconsin.

Barracuda

The barracuda, according to Warren Zeiller of the Miami Seaquarium, is not a member of the shark family, but like the shark it is dangerous because of its unreliable behavior. The largest barracuda on record measured 5½ feet and weighed 103 pounds.

says Richard Taylor, truck driver. "I was so sick I couldn't eat, and lost 56 lbs. My ulcer would clear up a month or two and then return. No doctor could help me until I took Dr. Wing's treatment. After two weeks, I felt much better. In a short time later I quit and haven't taken any medication and eat anything I want and have gained back to 200 lbs. Truck driving is hard on my nerves but my stomach hasn't bothered me the last 2 years."

Business climate said bad

SACRAMENTO (AP) — Less than half the top businessmen who were mailed questionnaires bothered to reply, and most of those who did felt California does not have a promising climate for business growth, a state commission says.

The survey was conducted by the state Commission for Economic Development.

The commission mailed questionnaires about California's business climate to 646 top businessmen and got 306 replies, executive director Steven Smith reported Tuesday.

Nearly 62 per cent said they did not believe California is a very promising area for business growth.

More than 63 per cent said the California Environmental Quality Act should be amended to eliminate the requirement for environmental impact statements and reports for private development.

Nearly 62 per cent said the legislature should enact a temporary one-cent-per-gallon gas tax increase to complete unfinished freeways.

Figureheads

Figureheads are about as old as sailing itself. The art grew from the ancient custom of decorating ships' bows to invite guiding spirits to dwell in the vessels. Throughout the centures, nations decorated their ships, bows. During the Commonwealth of England period, the ship "Naseby" carried an image of the Lord Protector himself, Oliver Cromwell.

Ocean bottom appears safe site to bury atomic waste

WOODS HOLE, Mass. (AP) — The dark, cold ocean bottom, geologically unchanged for 10 million years, someday may swallow the growing piles of radioactive waste from nuclear reactors.

A consortium of oceanographers and other scientists has been working on the burial of atomic wastes in the sea floor sediment or underlying rock for more than two years. Though cautious, the scientists say the idea looks promising.

"We have not found any information that tells us we ought to stop the study," said Dr. Charles D. Hollister of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution. "The concept may be sound, but we don't want to say we have the answer."

The isolated seabed areas being studied — under the north Central Pacific and the north Central Atlantic — were not affected by the last ice age, 10,000 to 25,000 years ago, Hollister said.

"In the ocean (floor) we have a continuous record of the environment for 10 million years," he said. "It's a unique history book.

"If we can look back and see no evidence of environmental change for the last 10 million years, we have a better chance to convince ourselves there will be no change for the next half million years."

He said scientists expect to know enough by 1985 to say whether ocean floor burial of atomic wastes is feasible or not.

Prof. Henry Kendall of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, a leader of the Union of Concerned Scientists, said the seabed disposal idea is relatively new, but worth study since some other plans fell apart.

"We are very much troubled at this point 25 years into the nuclear age that we find ourselves with no satisfactory way to dispose of nuclear waste," he said.

The Atomic Energy Commission had to abandon a plan to dump atomic trash in an old Lyons, Kan., salt mine and, according to Kendall returned to "building above ground crypts that would require permanent surveillance for very long periods of time."

He said there have already been leaks of stored radioactive material in New York, Georgia, Kentucky, Colorado, Idaho and Washington.

A group of 2,300 U.S. scientists concerned about the increasing quantities of dangerous atomic wastes asked President Ford and Congress recently to hold up nuclear power development until disposal and other safety issues are solved.

The United States alone now has 56 atomic power plants with an estimated 2,000 tons of stored, burned-out fuel. If development of these plants continues, the amount of dangerous nuclear material piling up may top that every year, scientists say.

Studies of earth's "plates," enormous chunks of the planet's crust which are still moving, indicate the most stable place to bury atomic junk safely is the floor of north central Pacific Ocean or possibly the north central Atlantic.

The focus now is on muddy clay sediment, which covers the seabed rock up to several thousand feet, to see how much insulation it provides.

The press and the American Revolution

How the French helped the Americans at Yorktown

By Dr. Francis G. Walett
Worcester State College

Ravaging the James River country and raiding the interior of Virginia in early 1781, British forces burned both public and private buildings, destroyed a great quantity of commodities, and captured much military equipment. After relating these events, the NEW-JERSEY GAZETTE of Jan. 31, tersely noted, "The enemy's forces are commanded by the parricide Arnold."

The news from the South caused General Washington to dispatch 1200 Continentals to aid the Virginia militia. To command the expedition, the commander-in-chief named one of his favorite officers, the Marquis de Lafayette, a young French nobleman who had volunteered his services in 1777. Congress had made Lafayette a major general without command, and the red-haired, excitable, enthusiastic Frenchman had quickly won the respect and affection of Washington.

Although command of the mission to bolster Virginia's defenses seemed to offer little chance to win glory, Lafayette undertook the task energetically. Little did he know at the time that he was to be prominently involved in the last great campaign of the American Revolution.

When he arrived at Baltimore, Lafayette borrowed on his own credit to buy shoes, hats, and other supplies for his ragamuffin men. Charming the ladies of the town, who gave a ball for him, the resourceful Frenchman got the women to make shirts for the soldiers.

Soon he moved the troops to Annapolis and from there overland to Richmond, all the while writing to both civil and military officials, drumming up additional help. When Gov. Jefferson wrote him that Virginia had "mild laws and a people not used to prompt obedience," Lafayette emphasized the shortage of supplies and declared "uncommon dangers require uncommon remedies." He would take what was needed, if it was not freely given.

While these events were taking place Gen. Cornwallis had marched his 1500 British regulars from Wilmington, N.C., to join forces with Arnold at Petersburg, Va., May 20. As more troops arrived Cornwallis had an army of over 7,000 men.

On the other side Gen. Lafayette's force was strengthened by Virginia militia including some impressive frontier riflemen. The Americans were still too weak to challenge the British, however. Lafayette wrote to Washington: "I am determined to skirmish but not to engage too far."

As the American commander, called "the boy general" by Cornwallis, sparred with the enemy, he "danced away" in time to avoid a general engagement that probably would have been fatal. In June 1781 Lafayette was joined by 1,000 Pennsylvania Continentals under Gen. Anthony Wayne. This did not give the Americans superior strength by any means, but it enabled them to stay closer to the enemy and control destructive raids.

By June 15 Cornwallis had returned to Richmond and begun the march down the peninsula between the James and York Rivers to Williamsburg. He had decided to move closer to the sea where he could maintain better communication with the British in New York. Lafayette followed at a safe distance.

Sir Henry Clinton, the commander-in-chief of British forces in America, was in New York. He disliked Lord Cornwallis, who operated pretty much as he pleased, and he disagreed with the conduct of the war in the South. The whole Virginia campaign, Clinton thought, was pointless and futile.

Wasn't New York City the most strategic location in America? Gen. Clinton believed that Washington would strike there, and he felt it was his duty to hold the place at all cost. When Clinton learned that a strong French fleet with many troops was sailing for America, he was determined to strengthen his position.

Consequently, Clinton urged Cornwallis to fortify a defensive position on Chesapeake Bay, leave a garrison there, and bring the bulk of his army to New York. Despite the wishes of his superior, Cornwallis refused to follow this plan. He wrote Clinton that if all the British forces were not left in Virginia, none at all should be left there; and he made plans to cross the James River and march to Portsmouth preparatory to sailing for New York.

With this word the British began to erect fortification in early August, not only at Yorktown but also at Gloucester on the northern shore of the York River. Lord Cornwallis idled away some two months in the heat of summer at this work, hoping that reinforcements would arrive any day by sea.

His lordship seemed not to realize it, but he was, in reality, waiting for combined American and French forces to surround him.

Gen. Lafayette learned in early August 1781 that a French fleet under Admiral de Grasse was approaching Chesapeake Bay. If he could only keep the British in Yorktown, they would be in a trap. Establishing a line across the peninsula near Williamsburg, he vowed to Washington that he would do all he could to keep Cornwallis bottled up.

While these momentous events were taking place in Virginia, Gen. Washington had hardly been inactive. In the early summer he had urged on Count Rochambeau, the commander of French Troops, a joint assault on New York. When he learned that Adm. de Grasse was heading for Chesapeake Bay with 3,000 men, the American commander-in-chief now saw clearly that the allies had better move swiftly to take advantage of the chance to capture Cornwallis and his army.

Before he was able to carry this out, Cornwallis received additional instructions from the commander-in-chief. The latter having received advice from Britain that he should be more active in the Chesapeake area, now informed his subordinate that he must establish a base on Yorktown peninsula.

Washington rushed off dispatches to Lafayette encouraging him to do his utmost to contain the British. When 3,000 French soldiers, brought in by de Grasse, joined the Americans besieging Yorktown, Lafayette's task was somewhat lightened.

Meanwhile Washington and Rochambeau rushed

French help at Yorktown...

southward. As the Continentals moved into Philadelphia, happy crowds lined the streets; two days later French troops in their white coats marched briskly through the city with bands playing and townspeople cheering wildly.

It was now clear that the allies were determined to establish unquestionable superiority on both the land and sea near Yorktown. But Gen. Clinton at New York still seemed confident that the British army in the south was safe.

After the arrival of the French fleet and French reinforcements for Lafayette, Lord Cornwallis was not nearly so confident. He was blocked off at sea, but he hoped a British fleet would soon drive the French out of Chesapeake Bay. The army might be able to break through Lafayette's force, but certainly not without severe losses. And if the British did get through, they would have to march through hostile territory whichever way they turned. Cornwallis decided to take his chances on rescue by the British navy.

Soon French transports brought Washington's and Rochambeau's men down Chesapeake Bay and up the James River to Lafayette's lines outside of Yorktown. By late September General Cornwallis faced a well-equipped army of 16,000 men, about half of them French. The attackers also had heavy siege guns.

Clearly, the only hope for the British was relief from the sea and that was a remote hope. When a British fleet had arrived off the Chesapeake on Sept. 5, Adm. de Grasse went out to meet it; after some ineffectual maneuvering the British withdrew. Without much doubt now Cornwallis was doomed.

The allied forces strengthened their lines and shut off all escape routes by land for the enemy. As the Americans and French moved closer to Yorktown their heavy artillery opened a bombardment of the town. Cornwallis made several futile efforts to escape; and he clung to the slim hope that help would arrive from New York.

Gen. Clinton had of course become aware of the desperate plight of the British at Yorktown. Although he had 7,000 men ready to attempt a rescue of Cornwallis, there was nothing he could do without substantial naval support. When he finally set sail on Oct. 17 he did not have a strong fleet. How Clinton was going to force his way into Chesapeake Bay against superior French naval strength was a question never answered. Before the relief expedition arrived, Lord Cornwallis had surrendered.

Yorktown's defenses had been shattered by the allied bombardment. Charles Stedman, a contemporary British historian, wrote, "By the force of the enemy's cannonade the British works were tumbling into ruin; not a gun could be fired from them." In the face of this Cornwallis asked to negotiate; Washington demanded and got the complete surrender of the enemy.

The capitulation took place at Yorktown, Oct. 19, 1781. British troops marched out to lay down their arms between the lives of the allies, the French in their splendid white linen, the Americans somewhat shabby but still respectable in appearance.

Gen. Cornwallis, pleading illness, sulked in his tent, and sent Gen. Charles O'Hara to present his sword as custom required. O'Hara first offered the sword to Rochambeau, who refused it, pointing to Gen. Washington. The latter, always careful about protocol, directed Gen. Benjamin Lincoln to accept the sword.

Throughout the ceremony the British troops had their eyes fixed upon the French. To lay down arms to French gentlemen was one thing; to surrender to American peasants was humiliating. In keeping with their gloom, a British band played, "The World Turned Upside Down." Lafayette, however, ordered an American band to taunt the British with "Yankee Doodle."

Demonstrations, celebrations, broadsides, and newspapers everywhere greeted the glorious news of the victory at Yorktown. As the word spread throngs cheered, offered prayers of thanks, fired salutes, drank toasts and held banquets expressing their joy. Many believed with justification that this would mean the end of the war.

Not to be forgotten was the invaluable aid provided by the French.

Watching the Federal Reserve Board may help a lot

NEW YORK (AP) — Picture a newsstand dealer on a crowded city street shouting "Extra! Extra! Federal Funds Rate Drops Below 5 Per Cent!"

Or a television announcer breaking into the regular program to report: "Moments ago the Federal Reserve apparently moved to drain funds from the banking network."

Unlikely images, all right.

But in the past few years the stock market has indeed been giving bulletin-and-banner-headline treatment to such news of the Federal Reserve Board — "The Fed" for short — and the money and credit conditions which it oversees.

Stock traders watch the Fed today with the energy they might once have devoted to tracking trends in cardboard box production, or orders for machine tools, or even changes in the length of women's skirts.

Each in its time was seized upon by at least a part of the financial community as a leading indicator of future economic trends — and hence as a way to try to forecast the stock market.

The Fed is a government agency dating back to 1913 that acts as the nation's central bank. It works to influence the availability of money and credit with the goal of keeping the economy in balance, thus avoiding inflation and recession.

Its complex and often-obscure operations have attracted increased attention in recent years because of the wide swings the nation has seen in inflation, interest rates and business activity.

"In my view the most important thing in predicting the market is what is going on in government economic policy," says Norton H. Reamer, president of the Putnam Management Co. of Boston, which manages $4.2 billion in mutual funds and individual accounts. "That means two things. First, there's fiscal policy — government spending and taxes. Second, there's monetary policy — what the Fed is attempting to do with the money supply."

Investment experts caution, of course, that no one factor can be expected to provide the whole answer to the stock market, and investors' attention has a way of constantly shifting.

But they cite three reasons for keeping tabs now on the Fed:

—Its efforts to increase or slow down the growth of the money supply can affect the amount of money both consumers and businesses have to spend.

—Those same efforts can also influence the amount of money available for investment in stocks, shifting the balance of supply and demand in the stock market itself.

—Fed credit policies often strongly influence the direction of interest rates. That didn't matter so much to the stock market years ago when bonds and other securities might carry an interest rate of 3 or 4 or 5 per cent.

It mattered a great deal, however, when yields on interest-bearing investments that were seen as less risky than stocks shot up to double-figure levels by 1974, exceeding returns on many stocks.

Those rates have come down since, but high-rated bonds still offered 8 to 9 per cent interest this spring — formidable competition against stocks for the investor's dollar.

"Back in the 1950s shifts in Fed policy could go unnoticed for six months by the stock market," notes John C. Sutherland, senior vice president of Irving Trust Co., a large New York bank which manages $2 billion in its trust accounts. "With interest rates at a much higher level, that's changed now."

The conclusion seems simple enough then — to keep up with the fast money in the stock market, keep a close eye on the Fed. But it isn't that simple, because the central bank doesn't often report on the moves it makes the moment it makes them.

The Fed's open market committee, which decides on money and credit policy, makes public the minutes of its regular meetings 45 days after they take place.

Stock traders, being naturally impatient for information, aren't inclined to wait that long. So many of them have tried to figure out the Fed's plans for themselves.

Each Thursday afternoon, the New York Federal Reserve Bank issues a report that shows, among other things, how much the supply of money has expanded or contracted in the latest week for which figures are available.

The Fed has frequently stated its goal of keeping money supply growth within a moderate range in order to combat inflation. With that in mind, traders watch the Thursday Fed reports on the theory that changes in the money supply provide a clue to what the Fed is likely to do in the future.

A drop in the money supply, in that line of thinking, is good news for the stock market because it means the Fed can go easy on money and credit. It can let interest rates fall or even encourage them to do so.

A rise in the money supply, by the same logic, means bad news for stocks — pressure on the Fed to tighten up on monetary growth through moves that drive up interest rates by making money scarcer and more expensive.

But while brokerage firm analysts and institutional money managers agree that an investor should keep close tabs on long term changes in Fed policy, nearly all disapprove of the attention being paid to the weekly money figures.

"I think they've overdone short term Fed policy," says Larry Wachtel, a veteran market analyst at Bache Halsey Stuart. "Everybody gathers around the ticker at 4 p.m. Thursday, assuming that Fed policy changes with every blip in the money supply."

"Excessive excitement over the weekly data is pointless to begin with," remarks Reamer of Putnam Management. "One week's figures never mean anything. It's much too complex for the Fed to precisely adjust the money supply to its objectives each week."

If that's not a good approach, what is a better one?

Analysts suggest that investors looking for the least complicated way can simply monitor trends in interest rates.

No formula is infallible, but any major tightening in Fed policy is almost certain to be reflected in a rise in interest rates, usually bad news for the stock market. Similarly, any move by the Fed to ease up on money is likely to show up in a decline in rates.

Keeping tabs on the Fed itself is a good deal more complicated. The central bank, however, sometimes makes its intentions plain by announcing a change in one of three things:

—The discount rate, the interest rate it charges on loans to its member commercial banks.

—The amount of reserves banks must hold against their deposits.

—Margin requirements, the minimum percentage of cash investors must put up when buying stock on credit.

Send-a-kid-to-camp

Drive nears half-way mark; 15 children already financed

The Send-a-Kid-To-Camp drive is nearing the half-way mark with more than 15 children already being financed to attend a week of camp this summer.

Conducted by Donrey Public Foundation, Inc., the drive will continue through June 15. It is designed to send local needy children to a week of summer camp in the San Bernardino Mountains.

Camp sessions will be from July 3 to July 10 at Bluff Lake near Big Bear and July 24 to July 31 at Ta Ta Pochon in the Barton Flats area near Jenks Lake. At the camps, children will learn about nature and respect for themselves and others. They will go swimming, hiking and backpacking and will participate in arts and crafts and other supervised activities.

Each child will sleep in a bunk bed in a winterized insulated cabin with nine other children, a counselor and counselor-in-training.

It costs $70 to send one child to a week of summer camp. The price includes transportation, three meals per day and snacks and all activities.

There are many more children in the valley who would like to attend camp but whose environment and financial status make it impossible for them to go. Many of the children come from broken homes, homes in which one parent may not be working or may have deserted the family. In most cases, the family's income is barely subsistence level.

Your dollars can help send these children to a week of camp where trained counselors can work with them and give them the personalized attention they need.

Camp is a stepping stone in a child's life. Through the experience of camp, counselors and community agencies hope to be able to reach and help these children before they get into trouble.

In addition, it is the hope of the Foundation and the counselors working with the children that many of these needy children will eventually be willing to participate in community activities and agencies when camp has ended.

Make your check payable to the Donrey Public Foundation, Inc., and mail it to P.O. Box 2708, Pomona, Ca. 91766.

All contributions are tax deductible and lists of contributors will be printed in the Progress Bulletin unless persons specify that they wish to remain anonymous.

GIVE THEM A NEW OUTLOOK

Donations to the Send-a-Kid-to-Camp drive will help provide one week of vacation to youngsters such as these at Bluff Lake and at Ta Ta Pochon in the San Bernardino Mountains in July. The fund drive continues till June 15 under the auspices of the Donrey Public Foundation. It costs $70 to send a child to summer camp for one week.

Summer youth work program is planned

Some 496 youths will be employed this summer to work in non-profit public and private agencies under a federally-funded program administered by the Pomona Unified School District.

The work will begin June 14 as the CETA Summer Youth Employment Program.

Cooperating with the school district in this project are the City of Pomona and the Coalition of Youth Employment Programs.

Youths who qualify will be paid $2 30 an hour and allowed to work 20 hours a week for 10 weeks.

To be eligible applicants must be between 14 and 18 years of age, enrolled in a Pomona school or planning to attend college next fall, be from economically disadvantaged families, possess valid social security cards and live in Pomona.

Application forms are available now at all junior and senior high schools in the district and from the following community agencies: Pomona Athletic League, South Hills Neighborhood Service Center, Open Choices, Open Door, GLACCA, Teen Posts, NAPP, Employment Development Department, Pomona Boy's Club and the Pomona Valley Juvenile Diversion Office.

Pomona parents unhappy with program

Investigation of CEP requested

A group of Pomona parents dissatisfied with the handling of the Compensatory Education Program in the public schools has written to a state official requesting a full investigation of the program before funding for 1976-77 is approved.

The Compensatory Education Program this year brought in some $2 million federal and state funds which has been spent at 11 elementary schools to provide special services for the educationally disadvantaged and limited and non-English speaking students.

The group, calling itself Concerned Parents of the Pomona Unified School District, is headed by Rafael Chavarria, Lupe Ruiz and Cristina Carrizosa.

Their letter requesting the investigation was sent to Manuel Ceja, state director of compensatory education in Sacramento. It was signed by 14 parents.

"Several meetings have been conducted with board members, district and school administrators without positive results," the letter reads. "Therefore, Concerned Parents of the Pomona Unified School District request that the Compensatory Education funding for 1976-77 school year be delayed until there is a thorough program investigation, review and audit by the state monitoring team."

In citing their complaints of the handling of the program, Chavarria said administrators have failed to provide parent education classes concerning the Compensatory Education Program.

"As a result of this, there has been very little parent input in the planning, development and implementation of the Compensatory Education Program.

"Parents are often misguided or given the wrong information when they request information about the program," the letter continues. "For example, on April 28, parents from Philadelphia Elementary School requested a copy of the 1976-77 Comprehensive School Level Program plan from the district director of the program and were told the proposal was not complete.

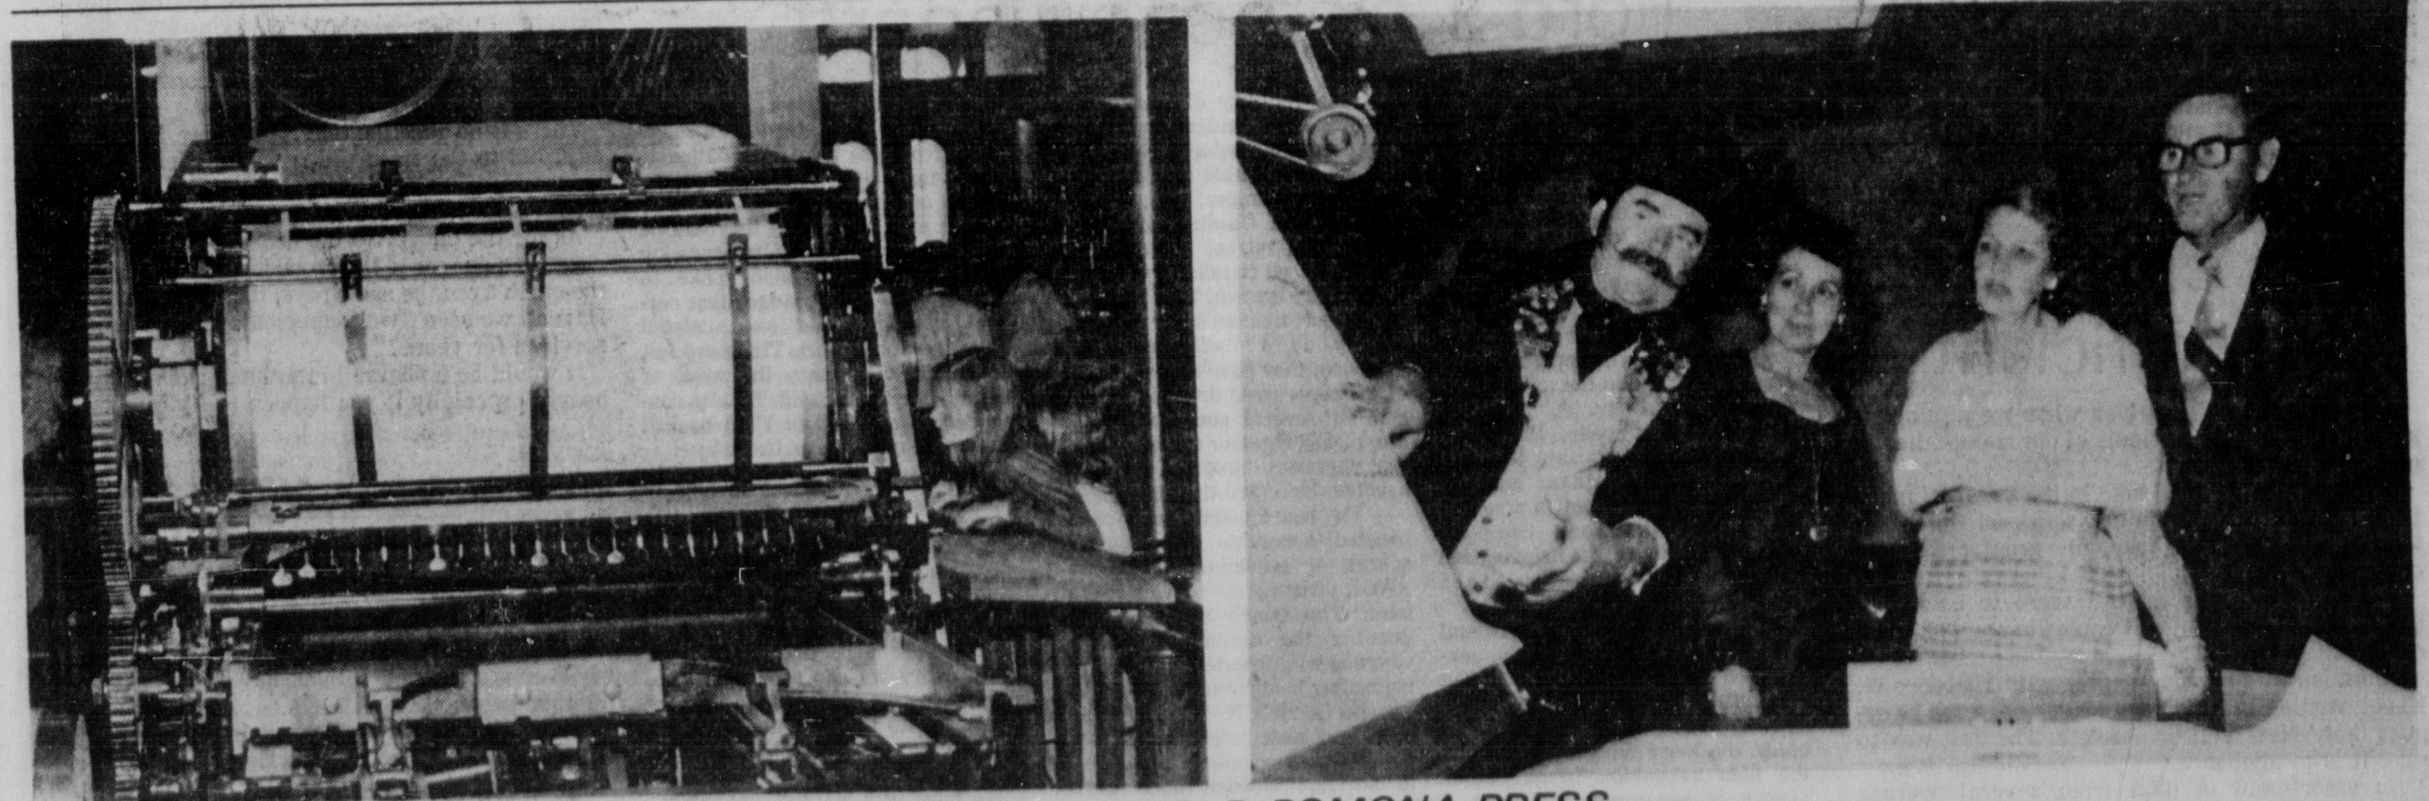
"It wasn't until we asked assistance from the district and the State Education Department officials that the director provided us with a copy. We feel this kind of pressure should not be necessary."

The letter also claims that "personnel not directly involved with the Compensatory Education students is hired and paid with program monies." The parents claim this is illegal.

"Unqualified personnel is hired with Compensatory Education monies to provide basic reading, math and language arts to children with Spanish as their primary language," the letter states.

The Compensatory Education Program this year is serving 4,734 children in 11 elementary schools.

The 11 schools are Alcott, Arroyo, Hamilton, Harrison, Kellogg, Lexington, Madison, North San Antonio, Philadelphia, Roosevelt and Washington. There are 21 elementary schools in the district.



ADMIRING AN OLD POMONA PRESS

Old printing press on display

By ERIC RUFF
PB Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Sitting in the Smithsonian Institution's special Bicentennial display here is the beginning of Pomona's modern-day newspaper, the Progress Bulletin.

The C. Potter Jr. Printing Press, built about 1865 and used at the turn of the century to print the old Pomona Progress, is one of many machines gathered by the institution to trace and illustrate the growth of America in 200 years.

About 10 years ago the cylindrical flat-bed machine was almost junked for scrap metal but was "rescued" by a printing press collector who heard of its plight.

"I heard about the press . . . and that no one wanted it," said collector Ernest A. Lindner of Los Angeles.

Lindner, in Washington recently to participate in the opening of the Bicentennial display, said, "It was just one of those things. I've rescued a lot of presses over the years.

"This one is a real honey."

The machine, on loan from Lindner, currently prints a newspaper that is given to tourists and onlookers visiting the exhibit.

Lindner purchased the press from the now-defunct Cucamonga Times. But, according to the collector, the machine got its start printing a California weekly shortly after it was constructed. About 1900 it was used to print the Pomona Progress.

"We know the press was built in the United States and then shipped around the horn of South America to California," said Lindner, who sells composing room machinery for a living.

He bases his information on talks with the press's owner at the Cucamonga Times, Silas Craig. "We also know the old press was originally powered by mule and then later by a steam engine," Lindner said. "Eventually an electric motor powered it."

Lindner says Craig has seen the number "1" on the flat-bed part of the press. "That could mean it was the first of its kind to be built," the collector said, "but we don't know for sure."

The machine will be on loan to the institution for at least two years according to Lindner. Afterward it will be brought back to his collection, currently housed in his Los Angeles office building.

"There are about 50 assorted presses and composing machines," Lindner said.

Shrinking state of GOP core

The contest for control of Congress is always a sideshow to the main event in a presidential year. If post-World War II history runs true to form, it will also be a foregone conclusion:

Whatever the outcome of the presidential race, the Democrats will emerge as the majority party in Congress, as they have in every election since 1954. The only real question is how large their majority will be.

A poll by the Harris organization finds that by a lopsided 52 per cent to 27 per cent, voters prefer the Democrats over the Republicans in the races for Congress this November. (All 435 seats in the House will be up for grabs in 1976 and 34 of the 100 seats in the Senate.)

A substantial 47 per cent of Americans now consider themselves to be Democrats, while no more than 20 per cent answer to the name Republican. The remaining 33 per cent identify themselves as "independents."

That is one reason the Democrats are likely to retain control of Congress, a control that has been broken only twice since 1932. Another, say the pollsters, is that for some time the public has felt it is better to have a divided government in Washington so that the legislative and executive branch could be a rein on each other.

If so, Americans have added a new form of check-and-balance to their system of government not envisioned by the framers of the Constitution.

A more fundamental reason, however, seems to lie in the way Americans perceive the two major parties. For all the regional and ideological divisions among the Democrats, which not infrequently have enabled a Republican minority in Congress to thwart or modify the programs of a Democratic president, the Democrats have been viewed since Franklin D. Roosevelt as the party with answers to the nation's problems, or at least a guiding philosophy adaptable to the changing challenges of the times.

The Republicans have been viewed as the party of reaction, if not reactionism — a kind of clean-up crew sent to "straighten out the mess in Washington" whenever the Democrats seemed to have gone too far. Republican successes have been due to Democratic excesses. The Democrats lead, the Republicans try to tidy up behind.

As one observer recently commented, if Republican philosophy, stripped to its essentials, stands for the maximum of individual freedom and the minimum of government interference in people's lives, the party is bereft of any grand design for the nation embodying programs that will both serve that philosophy and at the same time provide practical solutions to the needs and desires of Americans.

Less city is more efficient

We are deluding ourselves when we attempt to solve the economic problems of our super-cities by expansion.

The latest craze is to take in the suburbs, make these suburbanites pay for city services. The theory is, the wider the tax base, the greater the efficiency.

Well, the evidence doesn't seem to back that theorizing, at least when it comes to our 48 largest cities.

There is some reason to agree with Theodore W. Kheel, writing in New York magazine, when he argues that "New York is obsolete. The best way to save it is to abolish it."

An assortment of data from several sources seems to indicate maximum efficiency comes with much lower populations — say in the 150,000 to 300,000 range. It's downhill after that.

In the case of fire protection, for example, efficiency peaks at 300,000 citizens.

For schools, it seems that a city population of 200,000 to 250,000 is the optimum, with 40,000 to 50,000 pupils in daily attendance.

Growth cannot be stopped. But expansion can. The solution is to find ways to not enlarge our cities, remembering there is a real need to increase the cooperation between neighboring cities, and between cities and suburbs.

Part of the solution is finding fresh approaches to decentralization of the governments of our metropolises and encouraging, much more than we do now, the building of satellite cities which could slow the growth of the monsters.

Many of the historical advantages of the super cities have been lost with the decline of railways and the growth of truck lines, with the advent of closed-circuit TV and other wire and wireless communication, with the growing efficiencies of smaller plants in many industries.

There is no rational need today, for example, for the present concentration of federal government offices, agencies, sub offices, sub agencies and bureaus in Washington, D.C., especially those not concerned with the making of policy.

Name of the game

Dear Editor:

As a member of the Los Angeles County Bar Association, I bitterly resent the false and misleading attacks published against Judge William P. Kennedy by the biased friends of the late "busing judge". They will never forgive Judge Kennedy for defeating the "busing judge" in the 1970 election, and will get even now by fair means or foul.

The truth is, "As a matter of minute order record, only about 22% of all cases settle at the settlement conference, usually held 3 weeks before the scheduled trials", stated Joe Kavanaugh, Superior Court Civil Coordinator, in the April 1976 issue of the Los Angeles Trial Association Newsletter. In 1976 to date, William P. Kennedy, running for Superior Court Office No. 28, has settled 54% of all cases sent to him for settlement. Since the average case takes 5 days for trial, Judge Kennedy has saved the taxpayers about 3 months of trial time this year.

Judge Robert A. Wenke, Presiding Judge of the Superior Court in Los Angeles County, recently wrote in a monthly newsletter that "Settlements are the name of the game. The unsung heroes of the struggle against rising filings and case backlog include those who consistently manage to settle cases. Settlements are the key to success."

Please warn the voters that they must not be fooled by, but consider the source of, opinions against Judge Kennedy.

Law or emotion?

Dear Editor:

I would like to criticize the Pomona City Council members who recently approved a variance so that a resident of S. San Antonio Avenue could convert his garage into a bedroom.

When the Planning Commission recommended against the variance, the householder took his case to the city council. As a result, the city council gave the applicant permission to go ahead with his plans.

I feel that the Pomona City Council and the householder did not respect the laws set forth by the Planning Commission. I feel that it is dishonest for councilmen to justify their actions of the present with the mistakes of the past.

For instance, one councilman stated that he wasn't going to tell the applicant that he couldn't do what he wanted to do after the city has allowed builders to come to Pomona and get every variance possible. What is Pomona run by, law or emotion?

Ford's clemency board

WASHINGTON — Just eight days after President Ford pardoned Richard Nixon for his Watergate crimes, the President established a clemency board to offer similar charity to the draft dodgers and deserters of the Vietnam War.

He promised at an oval office ceremony in September, 1974, that the new board would bind up the nation's wounds and would offer the Vietnam violators an opportunity "to earn their return to the mainstream of American society."

For the next year, the board became bogged down in a jungle of red tape. The Vietnam outcasts found themseles caught in a sort of bureaucratic Vietnam, complete with the in-fighting, the bungling and the poor leadership that characterized the lost war.

The board offered conditional clemency to about 100,000 servicemen and 13,000 civilians who had committed offenses related to the war. To encourage the violators to apply, the board pledged not to make the files available "to any other agency of government." It was a promise that the board shortly violated by voting to forward evidence of serious crimes to the Justice Department.

This heightened the distrust of members of an alienated generation who, therefore, were slow to respond to the clemency offer. They were just beginning to gain confidence in the board when its charter ran out. The board asked President Ford for a six-month extension. But he extended the board only a month, then another month.

Despite a sudden surge of applications, he rejected a request for another extension and closed down the board. Of 113,337 eligible for clemency, only 21,729 applied before the deadline. The program ended in failure, therefore, with 91,608 Vietnam violators still consigned to purgatory.

The President, under increasing fire from the right wing of his own party, had become uneasy over the clemency program. He wanted to wind it up, according to White House sources, with a report that would appease its conservative critics.

The staff produced draft reports, however, that contained blistering criticisms of the selective service system. One report assailed local boards for failing sometimes to inform the registrants of their legal rights, declaring that "the processing of registrants was likely to be flawed" and that the "exercise of (their) rights was often meaningless."

Selective service officials often refused to certify registrants as conscientious objectors, a staff report charges, because of a "lack of familiarity with teachings of religion (and) lack of general acceptance."

Another staff analysis charged that the military discharge office had failed to consider a man's entire service career before slapping him with an undesirable discharge.

But in September, 1975, the board met at the Camp David, Md., presidential retreat and quietly cut out almost all criticism of the selective service system. They produced a final report that our sources describe simply as a "whitewash." As evidence, they have shown us copies of the suppressed draft report.

From several sources, we have also pieced together the story of how the clemency program was mishandled. Here are the highlights:

— The board unanimously recommended honorable discharges for scores of servicemen who went AWOL after heroic service in Vietnam. The board also urged upgrading the discharges of servicemen who deserted their military units after being injured. Ex-Senator Charles Goodell, R.-N.Y., personally presented these recommendations to White House counsel Philip Buchen in late 1974. Goodell made another personal appeal directly to the President. But Ford still hasn't acted on the recommendations.

— Similarly, he has ignored another board recommendation to grant pardons to about 700 servicemen who face prosecution for minor offenses they committed after returning from Vietnam.

— The board granted "clemency discharges" to thousands of Vietnam servicemen. These were supposed to remove the stigma of an undesirable discharge. Yet incredibly, servicemen with undesirable discharges have had better results getting veterans benefits. Goodell has acknowledged privately that a clemency discharge is sometimes worse than an undesirable discharge.

— A clemency discharge is also supposed to improve the veteran's chance of eventually gaining an honorable discharge from the Pentagon. Yet our sources say the Pentagon brass look with scorn upon the clemency discharges. The practical effect has been to make it more difficult for the veterans to upgrade their discharges.

— The clemency board promised applicants that they could comment on the case summaries before they were submitted to the board. These summaries were used by the board members to help them judge the case. We have established, however, that the board usually made decisions before giving the applicants a chance to respond. When some applicants learned about this, they threatened to sue. The board immediately reneged on the promise, issued new regulations and applied them retroactively.

The staff members who played the most important roles in the board's operation were chief counsel Lawrence Baskir and staff director William Strauss. Now Baskir and Strauss have obtained a $220,000 grant from the Ford Foundation to study the clemency program they helped administer.

Both men assured us they will be both fair and objective in assessing the program. We also spoke to Goodell who acknowledged that certain criticisms had been deleted from the final report. The board felt it shouldn't evaluate the work of other agencies, he said. He also contended that President Ford backed the board on most matters.

FORD HITS BACK: In a recent column, we reported that one of the most promising House freshmen, Rep. Harold Ford, D-Tenn., had knowingly violated the law by using government manpower trainees to do the work that cronies on his office payroll were neglecting.

The story was no sooner off the press than the Congressman began screaming to the skies that we had singled him out for attack because he was black.

We have now learned, unhappily, this is his hallmark. In the past, he has called newsmen who revealed his wrongdoings racists, hotel men who wanted their bills paid racists, hotel men who wanted their bills paid racists, and businessmen who complained of his bad checks racists.

We believe his constituents are too intelligent to believe his continued wolf! wolf! cries. There was nothing racial about his actions. He got nervous about his payroll abuses himself and quietly asked the Library of Congress for a legal opinion.

In unmistakably language, the Library advised him last September that he was violating two federal laws. Yet he kept the manpower trainees in his office until we revealed the violations and other malfeasances last month.

As it now turns out, we underestimated Ford's disregard for the law. The Labor Department also warned him that he was acting illegally. And he ignored this warning, too.

Moreover, his home town paper, the Memphis Commercial Appeal, following up our story, discovered two more federal trainees working illegally for Ford. One of them turned out to be the Congressman's own sister, Mrs. Joyce Miller.

This would also appear to violate House rules against nepotism. When the paper asked Ford about it, his improbable answer was: "I didn't know she worked in the office."

Reluctance to accept Concorde

By TERRY WADE
PB Washington Writer

WASHINGTON — The United States has finally been linked with the rest of the world by supersonic transportation.

We may have been dragged kicking and screaming into this latest age of speed, but nevertheless it happened and just outside the nation's capital.

When a British and a French Concorde landed at Washington's Dulles International Airport within moments of each other earlier this week it marked the first time commercial passengers had flown to this country faster than the speed of sound.

The political and social upheaval this plane, the Concorde, has caused in this part of the country, may far exceed, in damage, the effects on our ears and the earth's ozone.

Despite intense testing and a long period of soul searching by the Department of Transportation there are those in this country who think the supersonic planes are dangerous to our health.

It is ironic that the same nation that has shown the way to the rest of the world in most technological areas including nuclear physics would be so frightened of a majestic looking plane.

Opponents of the Concorde are reacting much like the skeptics must have when they first heard about the steam engine or seen the first horseless carriage.

We are frightened of the unknown and despite all the knowledge available and all the testing in the world there are still unknowns when we delve into an area where we have never been before.

The reluctance to accept the Concorde might be just a little due to the fact that we didn't build it. Environmentalists successfully forced this nation to abandon the supersonic plane years ago.

Our dropping of the plane was the right decision. The government had no business getting into the private airplane industry.

But, just because the plane wasn't built here is no reason to assume that it isn't well constructed and well tested.

There is no question that it is louder, but we have adjusted to the train which was far louder than a wagon caravan and the automobile which was louder than the horse and buggy.

As for the danger to the ozone layer. If the Concorde is a danger to the ozone layer, which protects the earth from the sun's rays, then we are doomed. Haven't we been flying supersonic jets in the armed services for years?

It would be a shame to mothball such a thing of beauty especially if you happen to fly often.

Joyce Hifler

Think on these things

Never have so many been so incapable at making a decision. They wait and see how the masses respond and too often rush to the side of whatever or whoever is approved without having thought it out for themselves.

There is massive indecision in every possible area, and anyone who knows what he wants and can say it in a few simple sentences without a lot of qualifications is a rare individual. We wait to be spoon-fed what to think, listening to the profound discoveries of some learned group, only to be warned a short time later that "further studies" show an ultimate danger. The further study should be in the area of who we are — an in-depth study of self, of why we are here and what makes us tick as individuals. Until we know this, all the other things means chasing after everything and catching nothing.

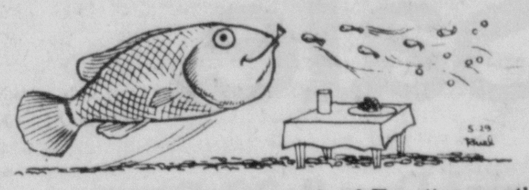
Dr. Miller

Mouth breeder devoted mother



DEAR DR. MILLER: I have a pair of Egyptian mouth breeders. I'm hoping they'll breed. I know the female broods and takes care of her young in her mouth. I also know she stops eating at this time, presumably so she won't be tempted to eat her own babies. How long can she go without food, I wonder? — N.E.

DEAR N.E.: Haplochromis multicolor, the Egyptian mouth breeder, does indeed show a devotion to duty far beyond that of most parents. The female's mouth enlarges to carry first the eggs, and then the young, initially up to 100. During this entire period, about five weeks, Mama nibbles nary a bit of food, becoming a shriveled shell of her former self. At the end of this period, the kids leave home and Ma's eating center in the brain kicks back up again, and she eats her way back to normal proportions within a couple of weeks. Occasionally, that hunger center never does activate and the poor exhausted female starves to death or succumbs to stress complications related to extreme malnutrition.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Just recently, Monique's begun slipping away before dawn and coming back with a bird for breakfast. I hate this. I've been taking the bird away from her when I could catch it, or her. Will this discourage her after a while? — P.D.

DEAR P.D.: It will soon discourage her from displaying her prowess as a huntress. She won't stop, of course, she'd simply pack her prey off to a more secluded spot. The best bet, birdwise, would be to keep Monique in entirely. (This could save her some eventual physical problems, too.) Barring that, though, next best would be to make sure she doesn't sneak out in the wee, small hours. Confine her at least until the new day has been around a while. Mid-morning, for example, would be a far less productive hunting period.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Is it just normal for a dog to bite? — F.A.

DEAR F.A.: Canines chomp (on something) from the time teeth appear until the time they're gone. Peoplebiting, conversely, is not as common a canine practice as many people believe. Most canines, fortunately, never indulge. A few do, with extreme provocation. That small group of canine peoplebiters who do so with enthusiasm and frequency are trained poorly or, most likely, not at all, have had initial repeated provocations, or have severe physiological or, more likely, psychological problems.

Things like that DO happen

Dear Ann Landers: I live in Elgin, Ill., and am a daily reader. We discuss your column at work during coffee break. Every now and then someone says, "She makes up those letters. Things like THAT just don't happen."

A friend of mind didn't write to you, but I'll bet if she had, people would say her letter was a phony from Yale. Here are the facts:

Bill and Sue were all set for a beautiful wedding. The best man and Bill had an argument and Bill had to get another best man. The parents of the ring-bearer had a misunderstanding with Sue and they had to get another ring-bearer.

The pastor was injured in an automobile accident and was in such pain during the ceremoney that only sheer heroism kept him from folding up. The florist delivered the flowers to the wrong address. They arrived at the church two hours after the ceremony.

The organist went on vacation and a replacement had to be found at the last minute. One of the bridesmaids was allergic to the flowers in her corsage and sneezed throughout the ceremony.

When the cake was brought out at the reception it slid apart and fell on the floor.

The photographer's film was accidentally exposed and there were not pictures.

Truth IS stranger than fiction, isn't it? — A Witness

Dear Wit: It sure is, and I believe every word of your letter. Good luck to the bride and groom. They deserve it!

Dear Ann: Can you explain to me why people are so insensitive and cruel? I've been overweight all my life. I know why I'm fat. My parents rejected me and I turned to food for comfort and satisfaction.

After years of self-hate I finally sought psychiatric help. At last I'm on the right track, but I'm still obese.

Hardly a day goes by that some clod doesn't comment on my size. Just today a teenager I'd never seen before yelled, "Don't sit on this side of the bus, it might tip over." Recently a famous movie actress said, "All fat people should be locked up. It would improve the environment."

How about a word of encouragement for a change? — Unwanted And Unloved

Dear Friend: How wonderful that you are getting the help you need. From your signature I can see you have a way to go. But hang in there and you'll make it.

As for the clods who comment, they are in worse shape than you. One day YOU will be thin, but they will probably be clods for the rest of their lives.

Dear Ann Landers: Last Wednesday I slipped in the kitchen and broke my wrist. I phoned my husband, Don, who was playing poker at a friend's house. Don said, "Tough luck, honey. Call a taxi and go to the emergency room. I'm on a winning streak."

Two weeks after we returned from our honeymoon, I got a terrible case of hives. I was really a mess. Don went on a fishing trip with the boys. Last year when our son was born, he fainted in the labor room and I had to take care of HIM. What's wrong with the guy? Or am I — Too Critical?

Dear T.C.: He is immature and inconsiderate, an unfortunate combination to say the least. Your husband is not man enough to face a crisis, so he flees at the first sign of trouble. You didn't ask for advice so I won't offer any. Good luck, honey.

Even if drinking is the "in" thing in your crowd, it needen't crowd you out. Learn the facts from Ann Landers' booklet, "Booze and You — For Teenagers Only." Send 50 cents in coin and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 1400, Elgin, Ill. 60120.

Letter writing a love of labor

I found a letter to my sister the other day that I had forgotten to mail.

It just needed a little updating to send. After 'The baby is . . ." I crossed out "toilet trained" and wrote in "graduating from high school this month."

And in the P.S. where I had written, "I found my first gray hair today,"' I ran a line through gray and substituted "black."

The rest of the letter was till current. "I am on a diet as my skin does not fit me anymore. The children are rotten and I am slipping away from reality. I am going to paint the bathroom and write to the rest of the family next week."

The trouble with me is I don't like to write letters, unless I have something exciting to report. I am intimidated by letter writers whose correspondence electrifies you.

I have one group of friends who only write me once a year — from a cruise ship. They know it's going to make me spit up with jealousy and they write cute little messages that begin, "Luv: Thinking of you as we island-hop," and end with, "Must dash. A Robert Redford lookaiike has been chasing me all over the ship."

Other pen pals I can live without are the people whose children are over-achievers. Their letters are filled with news of "Robbie," who just won a "Being" scholarship to Harvard. (He's so exceptional, all he had to do is sit there and breathe for four years.) There's also nine-year-old Rachel who is competing in the Baton Olympics, makes all her own clothes, just sold her first story to Reader's Digest, and is going to spend her entire summer reading the Bible. And don't forget little Kenneth, who gets up during the night to change his own Pampers. (Does you-know-who still have a plastic liner in his football uniform?)

The letter-writers who really bug me, though, are the ones with the stationery whose paper matches the envelopes. Sure it's easy to write a letter when you have all the equipment, but for me, it's a real hassle finding clean paper, a pencil, and a stamp.

It has been four days since I sent my sister the letter and when I didn't hear from her this morning, I lifted the phone, called, and said, "What's the matter? Is your arm broken?'

"I just got your letter," she said. "I'll answer it this afternoon."

"Well, hurry up. I have another three-cent stamp that's burning a hole in my pocket!"

Dr. Lamb

Question pills you're getting

DEAR DR. LAMB — I am 67 years old and have high blood pressure very bad. I have been taking one-half tablet of reserpine in the morning and Serpasil, one tablet, with meals each day. I read that they cause cancer of the breast. Should I stop taking them?

I used to take Aldomet and I changed doctors and he put me on the two I just mentioned.

DEAR READER — You can safely forget the scare about breast cancer from Serpasil (reserpine). Further studies failed to show any significant correlation.

Your big danger is not cancer from the side effects of reserpine. If a person takes too much over a period of time it can cause a severe depression, even to the point of casuing suicide. Anyone who has a history of depression should not use these medicines at all.

The initial dose of Serpasil is higher for two weeks to induce the desired effect. Thereafter a person should not take more than 01. to 0.25 milligrams a day.

I am concerned about your description of your medicines. The tablets come in 1 milligram, 0.25 milligram, and 0.1 milligram sizes. The two larger ones are scored so they can be broken in half. The small 0.1 milligram tablet is not. If you are past the two week point in your medication and happen to be taking three or four tablets a day I think you should discuss this with your doctor.

I dont' think anyone should change the medicines he or she is getting without the doctor's approval. That doesn't mean you shouldn't ask though.

You may not know what size tablets you are taking. Serpasil and reserpine are the same thing. I'm of the school that thinks patients should know what they are getting and why. That means the bottles of medicines should be labeled with the exact contents including the size of tablets. I don't see any useful purpose in not telling patients what they are getting. It was useful decades ago when doctors had to deal with all sorts of human ills and had few things to help them. In those days medicine was long on art and short on science. That situation no longer exists and the danger is of being short on art — translated into bedside manner.

All medicine bottles should also have an expiration date on them to indicate when the medicine in the bottle or container should be discarded. The same applies to over-the-counter home remedies you can buy. All should have a throwaway date on them. That includes vitamin preparations.

You can do a lot to help control your blood pressure in your daily living patterns. Many people develop normal blood pressure by losing any excess pounds of fat, even a small amount, and improving their physcial condition. Stopping stimulants, such as coffee, tea and colas is also helpful.

To give you more of this kind of information I am sending you The Health Letter number 1-8, Blood Pressure. Other readers can get this information by forwarding 50 cents, with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for mailing. Address your letter to me in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

You are playing a very normal three notrump contract in the finals of the blue ribbon pairs. You decide to play dummy's nine of spades at trick one and are rewarded by seeing East play the king. Now you are sure of three spade tricks. You lay down your ace of clubs and the second nice thing happens. East produces the queen. Now you are sure of 11 tricks and interested in scoring 12.

One way to get 12 is to play West for ace and one diamond. The trouble with that line is that it just may turn out that you will wind up with less than the 11 tops you are now looking at.

There is another way to make those 12 tricks. If West holds the ace of diamonds and East the only heart stopper, you may develop a squeeze against East.

So at trick three you lead a spade tc dummy's jack. Next comes a diamond to your queen. East takes his ace and leads a third spade.

Now the squeeze develops if you remember to cash dummy's king of diamonds and run all your clubs. The last club forces East to establish your nine of diamonds or to unguard his queen of hearts.

We will repeat the answer Oswald Jacoby gave to that question after playing with the President at the White House.

Jacoby said he was a very good player, but if he hadn't had the responsibility of such things as commanding the Allied Forces in Europe and running the United States, he would have been as good as anyone.

$5 bills contain hidden number?

Do you call when UCLA researchers concocted that technique to make bricks out of cow dung? The substance was said to be both inexpensive and strong. And a lot of lighter than ordinary brick. But the merchandisers have been hard pressed to find a name for it. Somebody suggested KauHaus. Somebody else, Moo Brick. If you can come up with a better name for the stuff, I'll pass it along.

In the Rocky Mountains, six out of every 10 gas stations have self-service islands. But that's true of only a little more than two out of every 10 stations in the Northeast.

Another motel operator says it's almost unheard of for a wedding party to leave a bridal suite without stealing something.

HIDDEN NUMBER

Q — "Is it true there's a hidden number, 4372, in the left-side bushes on the back of every $5 bill?"

A — No, but a lot of people think it's true. What looks like 4372 there is just a leafy design by the engraver to make the bushes look more natural.

Only about 35 per cent of the applicants to this country's medical schools are accepted . . . Am asked to name the first bowler who ever rolled a perfect game on television. Steve Nagy is the fellow . . . Not many students anymore are taught that the great patriot Thomas Paine had apprenticed as a corset maker . . . An elephant's brain, remember, is about three times as big as the average human brain . . . Unless it's brand new, your telephone book is probably about 15 per cent thicker today than it was six months ago.

TORNADOES

Tornadoes can be expected to kill 184 people a year. And injure five times that many. At least, such has been a statistical average over the last six decades. This comes to mind, because right now, May, is the worst month for tonadoes, although April and June get their share. Four out of five touch down between noon and midnight, one out of five between 4 and 6 p.m.

Used to be you had to have a chest measurement of at least 37½ inches to qualify physically for a job as a policemen in Haverford Township, Pa. Some lady applicants objected, though. They called the rule six discrimination. Not at all, said some of the men unsmilingly, it should apply equally both to the males and to the females. But their argument did not prevail. The police department dropped the rule.

To beat inflation

Discolored wood can be bleached

By NORMAN H. STARK

Wood is a beautiful material. It has a feeling of warmth that other materials don't have. A well-kept wood floor enhances the beauty of any home. But it must be properly cared for to be at its best. One of the major problems is discoloration. Dirt and stains can become ground-in, causing unsightly darkening. When this happens, bleaching is called for. However, advance preparation is essential.

Accumulations of wax, oil and dirt must be removed. The best and most economical way I have found to do this is to use ordinary washing soda and very hot water. About a cup of soda to a gallon of water seems about right. Scrub the floor thoroughly and rinse with clear water. You're now ready to apply the bleach. Here's the formula.

You'll need one-half pound of SODIUM PERBORATE (available at a drugstore) and COLD WATER. Mix sufficient water into the sodium perborate to make a paste of a brushable consistency. Spread paste on floor taking one section at a time, and allow to stand and "work" for about 30 minutes. Remove with clear water. Repeat this procedure as often as necessary to bring surface to degree of lightness you desire. Because both materials you will use can be irritating to the skin, rubber gloves are suggested. Store the excess in glass or plastic container.

Besides the satisfaction you get by making your own products for personal or home care, most formulas are real money-savers that enable you to beat the prices of store-bought items.

(Like any chemical product you use at home, you should store this one safely, label it — listing ingredients and noting any cautions — and keep it out of reach of children.)

(There has never been a how-to book so practical and helpful as THE FORMULA BOOK. Hundreds of easy recipes put savings and fun into the making of your own personal and home care items. Over 200 pages of recipes, diagrams and instructions on ingredients and equipment, in a large paperback format, for only $5.95. Send to THE FORMULA BOOK, C/O Pomona Progress Bulletin, P.O. Box 2218, Shawnee Mission, Kan. 66201.)

Therefore, putting away falsehood, let everyone speak the truth with his neighbor, for we are members one of another. Be angry but do not sin; do not let the sun go down on your anger. — Ephesians 4:25, 26.

Almanac

By The Associated Press

Today is Sunday, May 30, the 151st day of 1976. There are 215 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On this date in 1431, Joan of Arc was burned at the stake in Rouen, France.

On this date:

In 1498, Christopher Columbus sailed from Spain on his third voyage to the New World.

In 1539, the Spanish explorer, Hernando de Soto, landed in Florida.

In 1883, a report that the New Brooklyn Bridge in New York was about to collapse created panic. Six persons on the bridge were trampled to death.

In 1942, during World War Two, more than 1,100 British bombers pounded Cologne, Germany.

In 1961, the dictator of the Dominican Republic, Rafael Trujillo, was assassinated.

In 1963, an estimated 10,000 persons were killed in a windstorm which struck east Pakistan.

Ten years ago: A U.S. Surveyor spacecraft was racing through space, trying to try to achieve America's first soft-landing on the moon.

Five years ago: U.S. Mariner Nine rocket was on its way toward the planet Mars after a successful launching.

One year ago: Leaders of the NATO nations wounded up a two-day summit meeting in Brussels, Belgium.

Today's birthdays: Band leader Benny Goodman is 67 years old. Former Postmaster General James Farley is 88.

Thought for today: What we see depends mainly on what we look for — John Lubbock, English astronomer and mathematician, 1803-1865.

Bicentennial footnote: Two hundred years ago today, it was reported that British forces were leaving Wilmington, N.C., by ship. The report said they left behind some blankets, with the intention, it was thought, of spreading some infectious disorder among Americans.

Protecting witnesses

The government gives them new lives

WASHINGTON (AP) — Joe the Gangster had testified against his buddies and he was sweating over a decision he had to make by morning.

Should he risk execution by the mob?

Or should he save himself and his family by accepting a U.S. government offer to move across the country, take a new name, and become an entirely different person? That meant telling his wife that he was a thief, a secret he had kept from her for years.

By morning, Joe had made his decision. He told his wife the whole story, and together they went to see Gerald Shur, a Justice Department lawyer, to arrange for their new names and new lives.

"I think she was relieved," Shur recalls now. "She had in mind that all these weird hours he was keeping was because he had a girl friend."

The man and his wife got their new identities through the department's 7-year-old witness protection program, a secret operation intended to save the lives of government witnesses who are probable targets of mob retaliation.

More than 2,000 witnesses — most of them once involved in organized crime, principally the Mafia — now have new names, new hometowns and new Social Security numbers, courtesy of the federal government.

"What you're trying to do is keep somebody alive," says Shur, a jowly 42-year-old New Yorker, who is chief of intelligence and special services for the Justice Department's crime section. Shur helped develop the program, ran it in its infancy, and works with the U.S. Marshals Service, which operates it now at a cost of $1.5 million annually.

"A witness is in the program as long as it's necessary for his security and well-being," said Frank Vandegrift, chief of field operations for the Marshals Service. "This is normally for life."

The case of Joe is fairly typical. He had been in organized crime, high enough on the totem pole to have incriminating evidence against his comrades, but not high enough to be a prime target of the government investigation.

The witness must have cooperation from the immediate family if the operation is to succeed, Shur said. "I always insist that husbands tell their wives. I've been amazed at how many wives didn't know what their husbands were doing."

The protection program sometimes requires quick action by federal officials.

One loan shark victim testified at the trial of his tormentors. The word came to the Justice Department: "They're going to break his legs this afternoon. He can't go home."

"Federal marshals were dispatched to his home to get his wife, to the school to get his kids," Shur said.

With federal marshals guarding them, the family members work with federal officials to pick the city that will be their new home.

Shur says, "We choose a place where he is not known and not likely to be recognized." Some go to big cities, others to small towns.

The Marshals Service helps the family find a house or apartment in their new community, arranges for their furniture to be moved secretly, provides new Social Security cards, and arranges for medical and school records to be moved.

The marshals instruct the relocated family to remember a local phone number and a Washington phone number, which they can call at any hour to reach their guardians in case of danger.

Finding the witness a job often proves to be the most difficult part of the operation, said Shur and Vandegrift. That aspect prompts the most complaints from witnesses unhappy with their new lives.

"It's curious," Shur observed. "Many of the people who do the complaining have never worked legitimately in their lives. What do you do with a man who has spent the last several years killing?"

If a witness's only skills are illegal, he may have to settle for a job as an unskilled laborer. And a drastic cut in pay.

But some witnesses are unusually resourceful. Shur told of a man who had a very profitable life in crime before he testified for the government and took on a new identity.

"He told us, 'Get me a job anywhere doing anything and I'll work my way up. If they won't pay a salary, say I'll work without a salary.' We persuaded a business executive to hire him for $15,000. The executive put out the story that the man was one of his wife's relatives.

"Sure enough, the fellow worked his way up and has moved on to a position in another industry where he's legitimately making $100,000 a year."

Not all the cases turn out so well. Shur says 10-15 per cent of the relocated witnesses commit new crimes. "I'm disappointed at the number I'm seeing, but they do what they know best."

Some have operated alone while others have linked up with crime organizations in their new communities.

"There was one guy who got involved with a local rackets operation, and he thought he was from a bigger city and could hustle them," Shur related. "He cheated on them. They didn't like the hustle and they did him in."

Shur and Vandegrift say the government does not shield people in the protection program from prosecution for new crimes.

A relocated family's natural yearning for relatives and the old neighborhood sometimes causes security risks.

It is drummed into the witness and his family that they must never reveal to parents, grandparents, brothers, sisters, other relatives or friends their new names and their new home.

The relocated family can send letters to relatives through the Marshals Service, which forwards the mail in a secret way so the recipients can't tell where it originated.

Sometimes a relative's illness or death will require the relocated family to return briefly to the old neighborhood. The Marshals Service cooperates to provide protection for such visits.

But success depends on the witness following instructions. One man didn't, and the consequences were fatal.

"We took a guy back home for a funeral," Shur said. "We specifically told him not to go to his old house. But he did. When he turned the doorknob, the door blew up in his face and he was killed."

As the program becomes better known, Shur says, more gangsters at higher levels in crime syndicates have been more willing to testify for the government.

And some relocated witnesses "have tried to snooker us," Shur said. "They get into new communities and don't like it and they'll call and tell us they're in danger."

Effective, great men sleep less?

BOSTON (AP) — People who sleep less than six hours a night — like Thomas Edison and Napoleon — tend to be efficient individuals who push problems aside and get on with the job, a sleep researcher says.

"One might suggest very roughly that great men in the sense of 'tortured geniuses' might be more likely to be long sleepers," Dr. Ernest Hartmann said recently.

"Great men in the sense of extremely effective, practical persons — administrators, applied scientists, political leaders, perhaps — may tend to be short sleepers," he said.

Hartmann, a researcher who heads a dream laboratory at Boston State Hospital, has been studying sleepers since 1969 and has interviewed more than 300 persons on the subject. He recently published a book, "The Functions of Sleep."

He said he believes the main difference in what kind of sleep different types of people get depends on how much they dream.

Hartmann said the long sleepers in his study spent two or three times as long in rapid eye movement or "REM" sleep, the period when dreams occur, and he speculated they need the extra time to resolve emotional and mental needs.

Both long and short sleepers need exactly the same amount of deep slow-wave sleep, he said, probably for the body to restore itself physically. Hartmann said very few people fall neatly into either group and that few in either group are geniuses.

Of his studies, he said: "These were all basically normal people. There's no way you could get a quick study of 300 geniuses."

VICTIM OF BIRDS — The smouldering remains of a DC-10 jetliner lie on a Kennedy airport runway after striking a flock of birds last November. Pilots complain of a variety of conditions at various airports around the country including the birds at New York's Kennedy and modified flight patterns because of noise regulations elsewhere. On this particular flight several birds caught in a jet engine caused it to explode during the takeoff run. The nearly 140 persons aboard escaped unharmed before flames engulfed the aircraft.

Airports attacked by pilots

WASHINGTON (AP) — The airport at St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands, where an American Airlines jet crashed last month, is one of several U.S. airports that some airline pilots contend are not as safe as they should be

Because of the pilots' complaints, the Airline Pilots Association, the trade union of commercial pilots, is surveying its members on the issue of airport safety. A spokesman says the Association can't comment publicly about what the pilots say until the survey is completed.

The pilots complain mostly about Kennedy Airport in New York, Washington's National Airport, Boston's Logan International, Los Angeles International, and the airports in San Diego, Calif., and Anchorage, Alaska.

Their criticism, stated in formal complaints to the Pilots Association, involves flights of birds too near runways and the use of some runways and flight paths under certain conditions. No pilot has charged that an American airport's entire operation is unsafe or not as safe as it should be.

The Virgin Islands crash on April 27 involved a controversial runway at the Harry S Truman airport serving Charlotte Amalie, the capital of St. Thomas. A Boeing 727-100 landed long on the 4,550-foot runway, hit an embankment and slammed into a gasoline station and rum factory. Thirty-seven of of the 88 persons aboard were killed. Many were tourists.

The runway has been criticized by pilots and by Virgin Islands politicians as too short for big jets. The American crash was the second airline accident at the airport in six years. The airport is surrounded by mountains on three sides and aircraft must approach from the sea. The 727-100 is the largest jet the Federal Aviation Administration allows to land at the airport. A half-dozen larger jets aren't allowed to land there.

The FAA, which has set the operational requirements to which some pilots object, contends that the procedures it mandates are safe. The National Transportation Safety Board, which investigates aircraft accidents, says it has never found that the operational requirements criticized by the pilots have caused an accident. However, it has found that one situation criticized — birds near airport runways — has caused accidents.

Much of the pilots' criticism concerns landing and takeoff flight paths they are required to follow to minimize noise on the ground or to skirt tall buildings. They also criticize restrictions that sometimes keep them from using all of an airport runway during landings.

Airline pilots on safety...

One airport always mentioned by pilots when discussing airport safety is National Airport in Alexandria, Va., just across the Potomac River from Washington.

Aircraft are not allowed to fly over certain restricted areas such as the White House or the Capitol and are required to follow the curving Potomac as a noise control measure when approaching the airport from the north.

This forces pilots to make a low level turn just before landing in order to line up with airport Runway 18. The pilots say this turn, which can be as much as 30 degrees, is made at an altitude of 200 to 300 feet. They contend a straighter approach would be safter because it would give them more time to stabilize their aircraft in level flight before landing, especially in bad weather requiring flight on instruments.

The FAA contends the procedure is safe in both good and bad weather.

"It's certainly safe enough," said J.A. Ferrarese, deputy director of the FAA's Flight Standards Service. "the visibility requirements and altitude requirements for the instrument approach are certainly high enough so there is plenty of time for the pilot to adjust his flight path accordingly."

Asked if the procedure is as safe as a straight-in landing, Ferrarese said, "Well when you phrase the question that way, it's just like saying is it safer to land on a 10,000 foot runway than a 5,000 foot runway, is it safer to land during the day than at night, is it safer to land on a dry runway than a wet runway.

"It's hard to answer. It's all relative. If we thought it was unsafe we wouldn't allow operations. We feel that the conditions under which we allow operations allow for an adequate margin of safety."

The pilots' primary objection to Kennedy in New York involves birds which sometimes flock near the end of runways. Birds were cited in connection with the accident last November of a National Airways DC10 jetliner. The crew aborted takeoff when birds were sucked into one engine, causing it to disintegrate. No one was injured but the aircraft was damaged.

The National Transportation Safety Board announced on April 1 that the General Electric engine used on the DC-10 might be more likely to disintegrate when birds are injested than other types of jet engines. It urged testing of the engine.

Kennedy Airport officials now assign people to patrol runways and scare away birds. The FAA says it is looking at ways to better control birds at airports.

Boston's Logan Airport is criticized because of bird problems (cited in a 1960 crash) and because pilots are forced to use less than the full 10,000 feet of Runway 4 during instrument approaches. Pilots also complain that noise abatement procedures at Logan prevent them from flying optimum courses under certain conditions.

The displaced threshold on Runway 4 is designed to keep airplanes from hitting ships in the nearby harbor during bad weather landings. Pilots say the instrument landing system on that runway places an aircraft 3,650 feet down the runway when the glidepath is followed. This means the plane has only 6,350 feet in which to stop instead of the 10,000 feet it has in good weather when visual landings are made.

Although there have been several major accidents at Logan in past years, the displaced threshold and the noise abatement procedures never have been cited as factors.

The FAA acknowleges that pilots do not like displaced threshholds "because they want as much runway as they can possibly get. But there is sufficient runway for the plane to land so it is perfectly safe," said Ferrarese. He noted that several other airports around the country also have displaced thresholds. Birds are no longer a serious problem at Logan, he added.

San Diego's Runway 27 requires pilots to fly over the city when making an east to west approach. Tall buildings in the area require airplanes to remain higher than normal, in some pilots' view, and then to make a sharper than normal descent into the airport.

"You have towering buildings on your left and right and you feel like you're landing on main street," one pilot said.

There has never been a major accident on this runway, the National Transportation Safety Board says. The FAA says the descent angle is a "little bit unusual," but contends it is not a safety problem.

Los Angeles draws pilot criticism for the over water approaches required at night as a noise abatement procedure for planes that do not meet federal noise standards. This requires pilots using those planes to make their night approaches and takeoffs over the Pacific Ocean, unless wind conditions make those approaches unsafe. It also results in what pilots call head to head traffic — incoming and outgoing traffic on the same general heading.

The FAA says there is nothing unsafe about the airport.

"We've evaluated that airport thoroughly," said Ferrarese. "We've sent people from Washington there, looked at it under all kinds of conditions.

"Let me put it this way. The concern that has been expressed has been exaggerated."

San Diego's bridge adds 28th victim

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Authorities have recovered the body of a La Jolla teacher who leaped to his death from the San Diego-Coronado Bay Bridge.

Harbor Police found the body Monday of 37-year-old Eugene Sullivan, a teacher at Marcy Elementary School.

Deputy Coroner Robert Engel said witnesses reported seeing Sullivan park his car in the westbound lanes of the span Sunday night and hurl himself over the rail.

Officials say 28 persons have now committed suicide from the bridge

Military politics decried

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Top military jobs are going to men more adept at winning favors than winning battles, says a retired admiral.

Raymond Peet, a former assistant defense secretary, told a Rotarian audience Thursday that young career officers are being discouraged by the amount of mutual backscratching and backstabbing going on in the military.

"Think of the message our junior officers receive when the top jobs in their profession go to men who haven't had a major command or whose claim to fame is that they were aides to political office holders," Peet said. "Are you comfortable knowing that you are being defended by someone expert in handling Congress or who has political ambitions of his own?"

Peet also said the Navy's program of early promotions and retirements is robbing the service of experienced leadership.

"The incentive is for our senior officers to retire in their early 50's and they are doing so in large numbers," he said.

At Chaffey College

Indian art show set

"Tribal Arts of the Pacific Northwest," an exhibition of Indian totem poles, masks, baskets and other items, opens Tuesday at the Wignall Museum-Gallery at Chaffey College.

Gallery hours are noon to 4 p.m. and 7 to 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday, noon to 4 p.m. Friday, and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

SEA FARER — This figurine of a Boston sea captain, carved from argillite, a slate-like stone, is one of the works in "Tribal Arts of the Pacific Northwest," opening Tuesday at the Wignall Museum-Gallery, Chaffey College. The work is by a Haida Indian, carved about 1800.

The show has been brought from 12 different sources, including private collectors, the Southwest Museum, San Bernardino County Museum, and primitive art dealers in the Los Angeles area.

The exhibit features the arts of the main Indian tribes whose homes were centered along the rugged coastlines of Southern Alaska and the west coast of Canada and dates from the first European contact in the late 18th Century through the early 1900's. The material includes many items showing their craftsmanship in metals as well as in textiles, basketry, and wood carving.

Included in the show are three totem poles from the turn of the century, various masks that were used in tribal rituals, and a sculpture — portrait of a Boston sea captain, carved in argillite, a black slate-like stone.

Prior to European trade, men of wealth and social position proved their right to high rank at a feast called a potlatch during which the host fed his guests and gave away valuable items such as these to show how rich he was.

Illustrating the exhibit, the museum staff has prepared a series of nine photomurals, the negatives for which were made by the late Edward S. Curtis in 1904. An illustrated catalogue will be available for the exhibit.

The show opens Tuesday with a reception from 8 to 10 p.m. hosted by the Museum-Gallery Auxiliary, and will run through July 2 with a special showing on July 4. A color film entitled "Haida Carver" will be shown in the museum each day at noon and 7 p.m.

Guild to view ceramics

Carol Braley will demonstrate techniques of moulded ceramics for the Diamond Bar Artists Guild at her home at 106 Rock River Road, Diamond Bar, at 7:30 p.m. June 10.

Staci Heusinkveld, well known for her stained glass pieces, will show her work at various stages of development.

Admission to the dual exhibit is $1. The public is welcome.

Guild painters and craftsmen are urged to bring their work to the meeting for judging. The painting category this month is landscape.

The Guild is planning a three-day arts and crafts show to salute the opening of the Colrich Gallery in Diamond Bar Village in mid-July.

Pomona glass artist to show

Pomona artist Rhys Williams will demonstrate the age-old art of glass blowing at Craft Spectacular II to be held June 13 on the south lawns of the county Natural History Museum, Exposition Park, Los Angeles.

Williams studied with master craftsmen in the art in Paris, Milan and other European centers. He now exhibits his work at the Cactus Glassworks in Claremont.

Local history exhibit

"The Vintage Years," a historical exhibit of the early years of the Pomona and San Gabriel valleys, is on view through June 25 at Pomona First Federal Savings & Loan Association, 399 N. Garey Ave., Pomona.

Historical artifacts and pictures tell the story of the area's development from Indian times to World War II. The Southwest Museum loaned prehistoric Indian artifacts, and historical photographs were obtained from many collections. The drawings of the Rancho Era are by Jo Mora, and those of some famous still-standing old buildings are by Marilyn Anderson.

The display stresses the area's citrus industry with orange crate labels, a "smudge pot" (orchard heater) and photographs of picking and packing oranges.

The exhibit was assembled by William F. King for the Mt. San Antonio College Community Services.

Viewing hours are 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on weekdays.

Poly to offer the 'Requiem'

The University Concert Choir of Cal Poly and the University - Community Symphony Orchestra will present Brahms' "Requiem" in the University Theater at 8:15 p.m. Thursday and Friday. Tickets are $2 general, $1 for students.

The presentations, which will be sung in English, will be directed by Donald Ambroson, assistant professor of music at the university.

The performances mark the first collaboration of the university choir and orchestra on a major 19th Century choral-orchestral work.

Soprano Melanie Chambers and baritone Geoffrey Lamb will be soloists. Approximately 120 Cal Poly students will take part.

Brahams' "Requiem" differs from most other requiems in that the text is not drawn from the liturgy of the Roman Catholic church and was written in German rather than Latin. The Cal Poly choir has chosen to sing in English so that the text can be understood and enjoyed by the audience.

Charles E. Lindsley, associate professor of music at Cal Poly, is the director of the choir.

THE MAP — A map is the key to freedom of the city for visitors to Wasnington in this Bicentennial year — freedom to walk, wait in line . . . and lose your way; but also to be overwhelmed, proud and immensely more secure in your knowledge of the United States.

Tourists swamp nation's capital in Bicentennial

WASHINGTON (AP) — So this is the year you are finally going to visit Washington.

Welcome, friend, but be prepared.

Prepare to walk, wait in line, lose your way. Prepare to be crowded, hot, thirsty, hungry, tired. Prepare to be lectured at, misinformed, awed, bored. Prepare to be slave to a map and a seeker of restrooms.

And be ready to be overwhelmed, proud, and immensely more secure in your knowledge and emotions about the United States.

The projection is that 17 million visitors will descend on Washington this bicentennial year. That's a 30 per cent increase over 1975, and an awesome 23 visitors for every one of Washington's 730,000 residents. Even counting the three million-plus persons in the metropolitan area, tourists will outnumber Washingtonians four-to-one.

That has prompted at least one airline to advertise that a trip to Florida is a fine way to escape the touristy hordes.

Police are adding strength and Chief Maurice Cullinane assures that Washington's crime rate is lower than many cities of comparable size.

Humorist Art Buchwald, looking askance at the expected invasion, notes that "in the daytime you would be as safe in Washington as you would be at night in Central Park."

During the Easter vacation rush and an unseasonable heat wave, a resident accompanied two first-time visitors on a typical two-day tour.

This is what they found:

8:15 a.m. — Enroute motel to White House in rush hour. Traffic circles confound the uninitiated. Washingtonian tells horror stories of rain and snow and paralyzed traffic. State-named avenues, cutting diagonally across the square-block pattern of alphabetized and numbered streets, may have been esthetic when Pierre L'Enfant laid them out in 1791; the visiting motorist needs advance study and courage.

8:45 a.m. — White House tour. Smart people write their congressmen for tickets in advance. Others line up at a tent to obtain a ticket for a specified time. At midafternoon the doors close. "After all," says visitors office director Michael J. Farrell, "these aren't museum rooms." The President and his lady use them when the tourists are gone.

Outside, on Pennsylvania Avenue, a lonely picket parades where sometimes there are hundreds. "Nixon is now well enough to sit in the witness box," says his sandwich board. A visitor, unmindful of the First Amendment, asks policeman E.J. Brosnahan, Visiting Washington for Bicentennial...

"How come they let that fellow walk around with that sign?"

Brosnahan: "He doesn't like Richard Nixon."

9:30 a.m. — Taxi to Capitol. Around the Treasury Department, not as imposing as its picture on the $10 bill, and down Pennsylvania Avenue. Visitors excited at recognizing the entrance of the Justice Department because they've seen it on "The FBI" on television. Disappointed when told the FBI now has its own home, across the street.

9:40 a.m. — The Capitol. Crowd lines down the broad steps. Inside, always, an astonished first glance at the great dome 183 feet above, then a look toward the center spot where John Kennedy and two dozen others high and mighty lay in state. Congress is not in session. Resident says, "You're not missing much; there seldom are more than a handful of legislators on the floor."

11:30 a.m. — The Supreme Court. The court isn't sitting. Visitors learn that by tradition each justice shakes hands with each other justice in a gesture of amity before entering the chamber. Also that $10 million was appropriated for the building completed in 1935 and that $94,000 was returned unused — the last time that may have happened in spendthrift Washington.

12:45 p.m. — Library of Congress. This lavish ornamented building with its hundreds of miles of bookshelves has newfound fame in the film, "All the President's Men." The fictional Woodward and Bernstein pore over papers as the camera recedes to reveal the concentric mahogany desks in the great room. Outside the reading room, displays include a Gutenberg Bible and a letter written by George Washington.

"He had good handwriting," the husband-visitor notes.

"Our son Gerry has good handwriting," says his wife.

2:30 p.m. — Resident notices visitors' eyes have glazed over, suggests a merciful rest because "you can absorb only so much in a day."

7 p.m. — Dinner. People with children be warned — unless the children like fancy foods. Saving grace is that everyone may be too tired to eat.

9:30 p.m. — Best time to drive through Washington. The imposing buildings are now emptied of people but bathed in enough light to make even the Federal Trade Commission look interesting. Visitors go to the breath-taking, night-lit statue of Abraham Lincoln seated with brooding gaze toward the Washington monument and the Capitol beyond. City planners recently made it impossible to drive in front of the Lincoln Memorial, even late at night. The resident tour guide learns this the hard way; a $15 ticket for "barricades, driving through." Visitor reaches into his wallet for a "5 to slip to the cop." Resident has visions of spending night in the D.C. jail, not one of the capital's attractions.

Second Day, 10:15 a.m. — FBI Tour.

"Three hundred and sixtynine have been on the most wanted list since it was started," says the guide.

A 10-year-old boy points at a picture and asks, "Is that Al Capone?"

"No," says the guide, "it's J. Edgar Hoover."

The most popular part of the tour is the firing range where an agent shoots perfect holes with a pistol into the head of a man's silhouette, then finishes him off with machine gun bursts that leave a gap in the chest the size of a silver dollar. Crowd applauds.

Noon — Ford's Theater. All eyes lift to the bunting draped box at stage left where Abraham Lincoln sat to watch "Our American Cousin" on That Night. The acoustics, apparently unimproved since 1865, cause a tourist to say irreverently, "If he hadn't been shot, he probably would have fallen out of the box trying to hear."

1:30 p.m. — Mount Vernon. The drive, 15 miles south of Washington, is spectacular; through Alexandria with its pre-Revolution houses, along the widening Potomac River, past taverns where Washington drank ale and stout.

4 p.m. — Arlington National Cemetery. People come by the thousands daily; an unflagging pilgrimage to John F. Kennedy's grave and obeisance at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

It is the last of two days of sightseeing, but there is so much, the Washington resident explains, that two days cannot do the place justice.

After all, Franklin and Jefferson lived here. This is where Lincoln agonized over the Civil War even as troops were quartered in the White House and the Capitol. Wilson agonized over peace, Roosevelt fought the Depression. Truman made decisions in the White House which he called "the finest prison in the world."

This was the site in 1932 of bonus marchers being driven off Capitol Hill, this is where MacArthur bade a soldier's farewell, this is where 200,000 people heard Martin Luther King say "I have a Dream."

To really tour Washington, the resident explains, is to go backward in time.

Government procurement costs cut

WASHINGTON (AP) — If the No. 2 pencil available at the corner drug store is good enough for the American public, it should be good enough for the massive federal bureaucracy, the government has decided.

Pens, pencils and many other items especially made for the government may become relics of the past under a new federal procurement policy.

While the new policy won't result in soldiers reporting for duty in street clothes, it may put an end to such things as pencils and pens stamped "Property of the U.S. Government."

The government's new policy will be to purchase commercial, "off-the-shelf" products, whenever feasible, instead of products designed to meet sometimes complicated federal specifications, the Office of Federal Procurement Policy announced last week.

Daniel S. Wilson, head of a committee that will put the policy into effect, said it should result in significant savings in procurement costs, which are expected to total $66 billion in fiscal 1976.

Using commercially available electronic test equipment, for example, could save up to $80 million annually, the procurement office said.

In addition to reducing the cost of some merchandise, the policy should also cut the time and expense of developing government specifications, permit smaller inventories and pare government warehouse operations, it said in a report.

En Salt Lake City

Delegacion de 50 participan en el Foro Nacional Chicano

Una delegacion de unos 50 Mexico-Americanos del valle participan en el Foro Nacional Chicano en el Salt Palace Convention Center en Salt Lake City, Utah, de acuerdo a un anuncio del Comite Organizador del Foro Nacional Chicano.

El foro concluye hoy. Desde enero, los presidentes del comite, Armando Navarro de Cucamonga, y Abelardo Delgado, y miembros del comite, han viajado extensamente por el sudoeste. Se han reunido con lideres de la comunidad y profesionales, apareciendo en television recogiendo apoyo y sugerencias de las comunidades para la formulacion del programa de foro.

"Las reacciones a tener un foro nacional orientado a la respuesta a la pregunta "que es lo que se debe hacer", acerca de la direccion y accion, han sido positivas y entusiastas. Esto ha servido para reenforzar la determinacion del comite de tener un foro que proveera resultados positivos y tengentes", dijo Navarro.

"Esperamos que este foro sea el comienzo de los esfuerzos para unir, consolidar, y darle al movimiento chicano la direccion y organizacion que necesita para reenforzar la lucha por propia determinacion y cambio".

Este foro es unico en el sentido de que es la primera vez en la historia del movimiento chicano que mexico-americanos representando varios sectores politicos de la comunidad, como organizadores, intelectuales, administradores, curas, trabajadores, campesinos y estudiantes, se reunen con el proposito especifico de discutir la posible formacion de una direccion comun o ideologia y plan general de accion, agrego Navarro.

Delgado agrego: "Este foro se esta llevando a cabo en un momento critico cuando existe una creciente necesidad de dialogo, cooperacion y coordinacion de chicanos hacia la creacion de un plan nacional de accion.

"Los problemas que plagan nuestras comunidades se han intensificado a pesar de los numerosos programas federales formulados para asistirnos. La lucha es demasiado extensa e importante para ser llevada individualmente, o en pequenos grupos, dichas acciones son reaccionarias en modo, desorganizadas, y esporadicas; esos dias del movimiento han quedado atras. Debemos marchar hacia adelante, unidos, si queremos hacer impacto."

Fiesta de Pomona sera suceso anual

Una fiesta celebrada en 1975 conmenorativa del centenario de Pomona y del bicentenario de la nacion fue tan popular que sera repetida este ano.

La segunda fiesta anual del Rancho San Jose, esta vez portando solamente un tema bicentenial, sera celebrada el domingo, agosto 8, desde las 9 de la noche en la Plaza Civica Central de Pomona.

La fiesta conmemora la donacion de tierras al Rancho San Jose en 1837, y el aniversario pasado estuvo patrocinada por las ciudades de Chino, Claremont, La Verne, Pomona y San Dimas.

"Esperamos que la fiesta de este ano sea mayor y mejor y que participe un numero mayor de ciudades de los alrededores", dijo J. Romo, presidente de festejos durante 1975 y 1976.

La celebracion de este ano seguira el formato de la fiesta de 1975.

La participacion artistica estara abierta para principiantes y para cantantes, danzantes y musicos semi-profesionales.

Clubs, grupos civicos, fraternales, religiosos, patrioticos y otras organizaciones beneficas han sido invitadas para operar los quioscos para la venta de alimentos, comidas, bebidas, objectos de arte y manufacturados, asi como otras cosas, como un medio para adquirir fondos para proyectos de beneficio comun.

Se sugieren estantes para exhibir obras de arte y demostraciones de como realizarlas por grupos beneficos no utilitarios.

Solicitudes para participar en todas las categorias se pueden obtener llamando Pomona Bicentennial Committee al (714) 620-2385.

Se haceptan voluntarios. Llamar a Romo al 629-2862.

Concierto

El Montclair Starlite Symphonette, conducida por Fred E. Graff presentara un concierto en el auditorio del Montclair High School el 3 de junio a las 20 y 15. La entrada es gratis.

Este es el concierto final del Montclair Starlite ofrecido gratuitamente durante el otono e invierno por la ciudad de Montclair.

La fluatista Linda Jones se presentara sola, tocando el "Poema para flauta y orquesta" de Charles T. Griffes. La Srta. Jones, exmaestra del distrito escolar de Ontario y Montclair, ha enseñado flauta en Arcadia por 15 años.

"El espiritu del hombre es mas importante que las meras fuerzas fisicas, y la fibra espiritual de una nacion que su riqueza". Dwight D. Eisenhower, 34 Presidente de los EE. UU.

"El arcoiris, que existe en todas las cabezas y nunca muere, es la parte esencial del hombre. A su traves se convierte en lo que llamamos humano, y no de otra manera". — Naturalista Loren Eiseley in "La Piramide Invisible".

Cargos de conducta inmoral en escuelas

Incidentes en que se alegan cargos de conducta inmoral en el distrito escolar de Chino fueron el topico del debate en la reunion de la junta escolar el martes.

Lyle Briggs les dijo a sus compañeros que el regalo de una bebida alcoholica a un maestro durante el reciente concierto primaveral en la escuela superior de Chino, estaba fuera de linea.

El regalo, presentado por otros maestros, deja un mal ejemplo para los estudiantes concurrentes al concierto, acuso Briggs. Noto que el distrito requiere que se provea a los estudiantes con informacion y adiestramiento en alcohol y drogas peligrosas y despues, "presentamos este regalo. Esta fuera de linea."

Briggs declaro que hay otros regalos apropiados que podian haber sido dados en lugar del alcohol.

El miembro de la junta, Al McCombs, respondiendo a lo dicho por Briggs, dijo: "el ensenar no para el la clase". Noto que los estudiantes no deberian fumar en la clase ni en actividades adicionales, lo que puede estar pasando.

"No veo razon para rebajar nuestros standards. Debiamos dar un buen ejemplo. La gente busca maneras de criar bien a sus hijos, con todos los problemas de nuestra sociedad."

El administrador Augustine Tapia noto que, hablando de "cosas inmorales," algunos articulos impresos en el periodico de la escuela son "sugestivos".

"Thanks to GE's Home Sentry® Smoke Alarm, we were able to save our home and our lives."

Rick and Sue Erdmann and their daughter, Chris, in front of their Neenah, Wisconsin, home. The one-story home has about 800 square feet of floor space. All rooms open directly off the living room—the kitchen on one side, the two bedrooms on the other.

On the night of December 23, 1975, while the Erdmann family was asleep, a smoky fire started in their kitchen. With the windows closed and the inside doors open, the Erdmanns could have been overcome by smoke. The GE Home Sentry Smoke Alarm in their bedroom sounded an alarm before they succumbed to smoke and in time for them to extinguish the fire.

The lives of many of the 6,000 men, women and children who died in home fires last year might have been saved if, like the Erdmanns, they had been warned in time.

The GE Home Sentry Smoke Alarm is an early-warning ionization device that "sniffs" the air for the presence of smoke and sounds an alarm as soon as smoke reaches it.

Rick Erdmann chose the battery-operated GE Home Sentry because it can sound an alarm even if household power fails. And it's the only battery-operated smoke alarm with a 3-point checking system so you can assure yourself that the alarm is in working order. Depending on your home, you may need more than one unit.

Of course, no one can guarantee against injury or loss of life in a fire. But the Erdmanns are convinced that the GE Home Sentry Smoke Alarm helped them save their home and their lives.

Opens new club year

Red Hill Country Club will be the setting for the opening luncheon for the Assistance League of Pomona Valley club year on Wednesday.

A social hour is scheduled at 11:30 a.m. and will precede the luncheon at 12:30 p.m. In charge of arrangements for the festive occasion are Mrs. William L.D. Chetney and Mrs. Charles Pacini.

Special guests at the event will include past presidents, who will be introduced by the retiring president, Mrs. Jack Pitzer, and associate members, with Mrs. Alan Thomas making these introductions.

The invocation will be given by Mary Ann Wilkinson, who has served this past year as president of the Assisteens, daughters of members and associates of Assistance League. She will also make a special presentation to the League.

Scrapbooks, featuring the organization's philanthropies and fund raising events over the past years, will be on display.

Close shave ruled out

MITCHELL, S. D. (AP) — The clean-shaven look is out for Mitchell males.

As part of the Bicentennial Corn Palace Stampede celebration, Mitchell men are required to grow beards or to purchase a $2 shaving permit.

Those who grow a beard will become Brothers of the Brush and will have an opportunity to purchase a button with that designation. Those who are found lacking both beard and permit will be subject to kangaroo court.

Pomona Valley Women

Edition date set

The Progress Bulletin has set Oct. 26 as the date for publication of its 15th annual edition of Pomona Valley Women so as to coincide with the resumption of club activity for the new season.

Nomination forms for the Woman Achievers of 1976 will be available after Sept. 7.

In previous years the edition was published in July. With the moving forward of the date for publication the newspaper management feels that stories included in the edition will be more up to date.

Expletives undeleted

DEAR DR. BROTHERS: I don't know if I really have a problem or not. When we are alone together my boy friend likes to use the dirtiest words he can think of. And he can think of a lot of them. I suppose I should be terribly shocked. But I'm not. I've heard them all before. They turn me off. But, they seem to turn him on and that part I like. Before writing to you, I tried uring a little psychology on my own. I tried breaking him of the habit by suggesting that we stop all this by both using any word any time we like. But he doesn't want to go along. Shouldn't that help? — E.G.

Dear E.G.: Probably not. At least not for very long. People who are excited by using dirty words are stirred precisely because they are forbidden words that cannot be used in ordinary conversation. If every dirty word in the English language were suddenly to become acceptable dinner-table conversation, a whole new collection would spring up to take their place. And it seems to me, we have enough of them now.

DEAR DR. BROTHERS: My 5-year-old daughter frequently startles me with her power of total recall. She memorizes words and numbers with amazing speed, and can completely and accurately describe places she saw for only a few minutes. Should I enroll her in a school for gifted children? — A.P.

Dear A.P.: Precision of memory is fairly common among young children, especially those under six. They can describe a scene as if they were still looking at it. These very detailed "memory pictures" are known as eidetic images.

Regardless of whether he understood it intellectually or not, the eidetic child can answer questions concerning anything he has seen even briefly. When asked to describe it, he seems to mentally project the picture and to report it in detail.

Children can also have acoustic images. They can repeat long lists of digits after hearing them only once. One psychologist told of an eidetic child who stared at the desk while being read a list of a dozen digits, then "read" them off, forwards and backwards, still looking at the desk.

The term "eidetic" implies that the images are as vivid as hallucinations. An important distinction should be noted, however. The eidetic child does not necessarily believe that the images are part of his surroundings. A person who hallucinates does believe that the imagined sights or sounds actually exist.

Unfortunately, eidetic imagery is rare in older children and adults. The closest parallel exists in those few individuals who report a "photographic memory."

Your daughter's eidetic imagery does not, in and of itself, indicate that you should enroll her in a special school. Her teachers in a regular school will no doubt inform you if she retains her outstanding powers of memory beyond the first year or two. A photographic memory in the later childhood years would be a tremendous headstart for a superior academic career, and under those circumstances, it might be advisable for you to then place your daughter in a school for the gifted.

British scribes label Caroline as 'Ms. Mess'

LONDON (AP) — The tabloid Daily Mirror fired a two-gun barrage at Caroline Kennedy recently, dubbing her "Ms. Mess" for her appearance in public.

Adverse comments by gossip columnist Paul Callan and fashion editor Lesley Ebbetts accompanied a picture of the late President Kennedy's 18-year-old daughter arriving in blue jeans at a London party for the Rolling Stones.

"Her jeans do not fit and look as though they've seen better days greasing wheels," Miss Ebbetts wrote. "This is carrying cheap chic a little too far."

"She hardly looks like her mother's daughter," Callan commented. "Jackie Onassis has always been the couturier's dream, always elegant, never sloppy. But daughter Caroline ... invariably dresses with a scant eye for fashion."

Caroline is studying art appreciation at Sotheby's, the auction house.

Reagan says he'll be 'lobbyist for the people'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Ronald Reagan says if he is elected president he will use the office to be "the lobbyist for the people, literally against government."

Reagan's theme as he campaigns in his home state's Republican primary against President Ford is an anti-government, anti-bureaucrat, antiWashington message.

And Ford, who served 25 years in Congress before assuming the vice presidency and then the Presidency, is the symbol of that Washington bureaucracy in Reagan's view.

At every campaign stop this past week in Southern California, Reagan told voters that there really is a difference between himself and Ford. Reagan described himself as a citizenpolitician, an outsider to government despite eight years as governor of California.

But Ford has been in Washington too long to change things, no matter how good his intentions might be, Reagan said.

"The status quo — that's Latin for the mess we are in," Reagan says of Washington with an obvious double entendre aimed also at the incumbent president.

"There are differences, and I believe one of the most fundemental differences is based upon our relative experiences. Mr. Ford spent most of his adult life as a member of the Washington establishment. I spent most of my adult life our in the private sector, and then for eight years as governor of California," Reagan says.

"When I was elected I had never served in public office. Being totally inexperienced I didn't know the things you couldn't do. So we did some of them, and they worked. I didn't turn to the politicians, because I didn't believe in them."

It is a message that contains relatively few specifics, but it is in tune with the anti-government mood of the conservative Republicans Reagan hopes to rally for a victory over Ford in California's winner-take-all June 8 Republican primary.

"Government can't seem to learn that government does its best sometimes when government does nothing," he says.

"I don't believe Washington has the answers to our problems. I believe Washington is the problem."

One of the few specifics Reagan proposes is to turn back to states and local governments full responsibility, and some unspecified tax sources, for welfare and education.

That is the remnant of the $90 billion program shift which Reagan proposed last September, a major issue in earlier primaries, usually to Reagan's disadvantage.

"Let our banner state that we will reduce the size and power of the federal government by turning back to the states and the local communities tasks that properly belong there and never should have been undertaken by Washington in the first place," he says.

"Today the federal government takes our money, runs it through Washington, subtracts a toll charge, and then sends it back to us a gift from Washington. Then they tell us exactly how we can spend our own money.

"Well, let them turn over to us the sources of taxation and we will collect the money at the local level, keep it at the local level, and perform the tasks they have failed at in Washington," he says.

This is the same approach Reagan took 10 years ago when he ran for governor of California as a former motion picture actor and lecturer turned citizen-politician.

He campaigned against the big spenders in state government and "the mess in Sacramento." And he promised to cut the size of state government.

Reagan did order a 10 per cent cut in every state department a month after he was sworn in as governor. But the cuts were rescinded as unworkable a few weeks later.

In the end, neither the size nor the cost of state government was reduced during Reagan's reign, despite constant talk of "cut, squeeze and trim."

After eight years, the state payroll had increased by 14,641 employees or about 12 per cent, state spending had doubled, and every major tax rate had been increased.

But Reagan did significantly slow the rate of growth and shift several major programs from the state to local government. He brought in hundreds of volunteer consultants from private business who set numerous state programs into new directions.

Even running for reelection as governor in 1970, Reagan was an anti-government candidate. And that's what he is today.

He says big government and the centralization of power in Washington are threats to the personal liberties of Americans.

"I would like to go to Washington — not because I can perform great deeds, but because I ... want to take part in a government in Washington that believes that we can turn around the last four decades.

"The president is the only one in Washington chosen by all the people. He is the lobbyist for the people, literally against government," Reagan says.

FTC asks for change on refunds

WASHINGTON (AP) — If you used merchandise before returning it for a cash refund because it was defective, the Federal Trade Commission is proposing that the manufacturer have the right to charge you for the use.

In a move that could diminish the value of so-called full warranties, the commission recently proposed allowing manufacturers to deduct a use charge from any refunds claimed by customers who buy defective products.

Hearings on the proposal will begin in late summer.

The proposal attempts "to balance in an equitable manner the consumer's interest in enforcing his rights under the full warranty and the interest of the marketplace in preventing any unjust enrichment of a consumer," according to a staff recommendation.

The rule would apply only to full, rather than limited, warranties and only when the customer actually has enjoyed some use of the product before it goes bad. It would not affect cases where the seller decides to replace the product, rather than refund the purchase price.

Under terms of a new federal statute, cash refunds under full warranties must now amount to the full purchase price, regardless of interim use. However, the law entitles the FTC to make the change it is now proposing.

The change would not be mandatory and manufacturers could continue to offer a full price refund if they choose. But if they wanted, they could deduct from that refund the percentage of actual product use against the "useful life" of the item.

The useful life — not to be confused with the length of the warranty — would have to be disclosed in the warranty, and the figure would be subject to FTC review.

Light becoming important in medicine

NEW YORK (AP) — "And God said, Let there be light: and there was light." — Genesis.

Today, scientists are still discovering more about the mysteries and miracles of light.

As examples:

—Exposing premature babies to light prevents a form of jaundice that otherwise can damage their brains or kill them.

—In Russia, the law requires that every coal miner be exposed daily to ultraviolet light, in the belief this helps prevent black lung disease from coal dust. Preliminary U.S. experiments with hamsters indicate it can work.

—Light can kill cancer cells in test-tube type experiments. But certain light rays can induce skin cancer and cataracts.

—Light can control sexual activity in birds and animals, and may affect human sex life, too.

Sunlight is the engine of life. It makes plants grow. Sun rays, in the ultraviolet range, tan or burn human skin. Ultraviolet light on the skin makes you produce vitamin D, essential to bone structure.

After sunlight, in mankind's history, came firelight from wood, and candlelight, and kerosene lamps, all with rather feeble but welcome new light.

Then nearly 90 years ago the first man-made light bulb clicked on, and a new era began. People could stay up later, work at night more easily, walk on illuminated streets. But more than habits were changed. Scientists began to discover the curious biological effects of natural and artificial light, many of them beneficial. Lately, however, they've begun to wonder whether some of the effects from light may be harmful, in subtle ways.

"Next to food, air and water, light is the most important input into human beings," says Luke Thorington, vice president of Duro-Test Corporation, a lamp manufacturer in New Jersey, and chairman of a study committee of the International Commission on Illumination. His committee is starting a study of the extrasensory effects of light — those not perceived merely in the sense of vision or warmth.

Exactly how ultraviolet light could prevent black lung disease is a mystery. Working with hamsters, an American scientist put coal dust particles, through tubes, into their lungs. Some animals were left in the dark, others were exposed for an hour a day to high intensity "daylight" type xenon light that also emits ultraviolet rays. The hamsters living in darkness developed heavy, dense lung particles four weeks later. Those exposed to simulated sunlight had much clearer lungs. But just how light protected their lungs is not known.

The perceptiveness of a nurse in England led to the use of light to save the brains and lives of premature babies. She noticed that premature babies near sunlit windows fared better than those in-

Probation system is challenged

WASHINGTON (AP) — Many convicts who return to crime while on probation stay out of jail because of overburdened state and local probation systems, a congressional report says.

The situation poses dangers to the public because of the tendency of persons on probation to commit more crimes, said the report issued this week by the General Accounting Office.

But the congressional auditors concluded that probation can be an effective rehabilitation tool when adequate supervision and such services as job counseling and drug treatment are provided.

The report probably will fuel the current debate over whether any efforts at rehabilitating criminals, either through probation or prison programs, really work.

The GAO analyzed the records of 1,200 persons who have completed probationary terms and 200 others now on probation in Philadelphia, Seattle, Portland, Ore., and Phoenix, Ariz.

The auditors found that 45 per cent of the 1,200 persons were convicted for new crimes while on probation. About half remained on probation despite the new conviction, the report said.

Of the 200 offenders now on probation, nearly half were arrested for 218 new crimes including robbery, assault, sex offenses, burglary, theft, and drug and alcohol violations. Some 74 were convicted of 126 new crimes, and all remained on probation, the report said.

In the four cities, 77 per cent of all convicted felons in 1974 were placed on probation rather than being sent to prison.

The agency initiated the study as part of its long-range effort to evaluate the effectiveness of federal law enforcement programs.

The Law Enforcement Assistance Administration should provide national leadership, more technical assistance and more money to help improve state and local probation systems, the auditors recommended.

Richard L. Fogel, an assistant GAO director, said the conclusions reached from the four-city study applied across the nation.

The report said the use of probation is increasing nationally because of overcrowded prisons, the lack of alternative penalties, and the fact that many judges and corrections officials believe probation "offers a better chance of rehabilitation than prison."

Another factor is that it costs only a few hundred dollars a year to keep a person on probation while it costs several thousand dollars to keep the person in prison, the report noted.

But probation officers have such heavy caseloads that they often provide only minimal supervision and few if any services to probationers, the report continued.

"A lack of control and danger to the public are evident," the auditors concluded. "We question whether society is adequately safeguarded when criminal repeaters continue to return to the community in a probationary status without adequate supervision and control."

Fogel said the auditors were unable to determine why judges allowed the repeat offenders to remain on probation.

Light and medicine...

side the nursery. But why?

As the story unfolded, it turned out that "preemies" during the first five to seven days of life often lack an enzyme, or chemical controller, in the liver that gets rid of a chemical, bilirubin, formed when red blood cells are broken down in a normal process.

So bilirubin accumulates, turning skin yellow and, worse, entering the brain to cause damage or death.

Just how light exerts influence on the liver or through the skin to do this is not yet understood. But perhaps 70,000 premature infants a year in this country alone are being treated successfully with light to prevent jaundice.

Light can not only kill bacteria, but sometimes also cancer cells.

At the University of California Medical School in San Francisco, Dr. Ivan Diamond set up cultures of brain tumor cells, then added heat to porphyrin, a chemical highly sensitive to visible light. When the cultures were exposed to sunlight - simulating fluorescent light, the tumor cells died within 2½ hours. And Dr. Diamond has found he can kill off 90 per cent of tumor cells in rats by directing glass pipes into the tumors.

At the University of Missouri in Columbia, Mo., Dr. Abraham Eisenstark found that bacteria growing in laboratory dishes were being killed by certain short wavelengths of ultraviolet light coming from fluorescent lamps, like those used in homes, offices and factories. The rays were turning one component of protein material in bacteria into a poison that interferes with normal cell reproduction.

He wonders whether the same kind of ultraviolet rays in ordinary sunlight could be jamming up the machinery of skin cells to produce cancers, or affecting cells in the lens of the eye to produce cataracts.

If so, he says, special ointments might block out the ultraviolet rays on the skin, and special goggles protect the eyes. Dr. Eisenstark says it is an open question whether office workers under fluorescent lights run any such risks of developing cataracts.

Moonlight is associated with romance. But sunlight and some artificial lighting can have profound effects on sex and reproduction.

"Annual rhythms in sexual activity, hibernation and migratory behavior are widespread among animals," with light being a strong factor, says Dr. Wurtman.

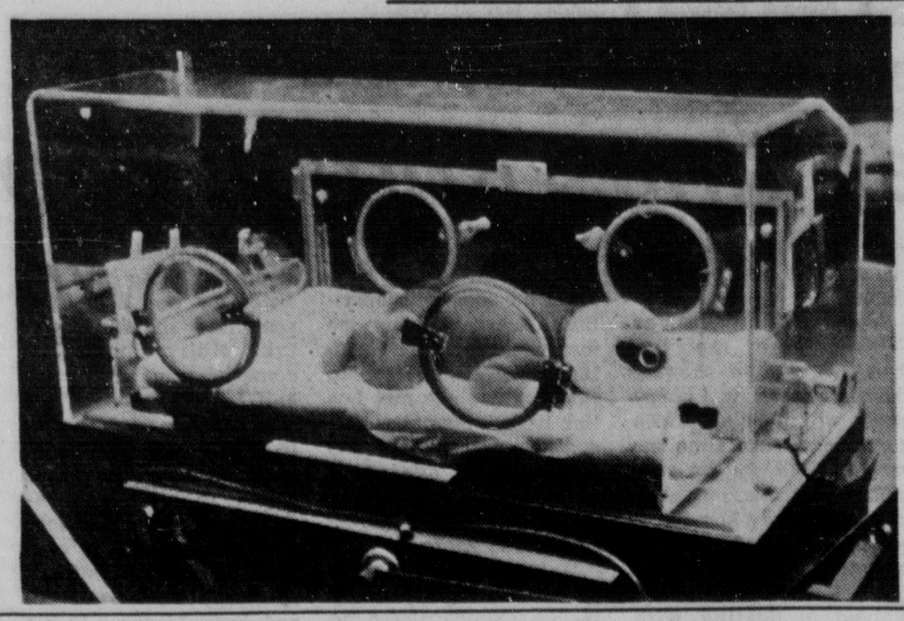
In one reaction chain involving reproduction, light coming to photoreceptors in the eyes affects a little-understood gland in the brain, the pineal gland, which secretes a hormone known as melatonin. Melatonin acts via the hypothalamus upon the pituitary gland to play a role in maturation and cyclic activity of the sex glands. If rats are blinded, or their pituitary glands are removed, then continuous exposure to light has no effect on the growth or function of the ovaries, the female sex glands.

Questions about biological effects of light abound, and light's effects may become something the family physician or specialist must become concerned with, Dr. Wurtman says.

Research is beginning into the effects of light, of different durations of time, intensity and kinds, on the natural "clocks" or biological rhythms of people and animals.

Light may well explain the mythological phenomenon of werewolves, says Thorington. For a few people, bright light causes a chemical change, when it acts on substances known as porphyrins in the blood. This can cause disfigurations of the face and hands, and make victims shy of light because it hurts their eyes. Excess porphyrin also makes their teeth look red. They could thus be seen as the night-prowling "werewolves."

There are challenges still ahead in photobiology.



LIGHT BATH — Basking in simulated sunshine, this newborn premature baby is undergoing hospital treatment to forestall damaging jaundice. In their first few days of life, "preemies" are vulnerable to a form of jaundice that can cause brain damage and death.

Finding a house will get harder

VANCOUVER, B.C. (AP) — You think there's a housing shortage now?

In the next 30 years, the United Nations says, 3.5 billion more people will need places to live, and that's enough to create 3,500 cities of a million residents each. There are fewer than 300 cities of that size now.

Aware of that, 4,000 delegates from 120 nations meet here for two weeks beginning today in the fifth United Nations conference to be held this decade — the U.N. Conference on Human Settlements, or Habitat.

Participants in the conference and a parallel gathering face facts, the U.N. says, like these:

—Another 600 million housing units will be needed in the next 30 years, or more than those existing in the entire world today.

—Even now, the World Health Organization believes more than a billion people don't have basics, like safe water to drink.

—Cities, towns and villages, especially those in developing countries, already are in crisis, lacking jobs, choked by pollution, crowded, inundated by slums, devoid of good transportation and riddled by crime.

Single Parent surmounts problems

Woman finds Korean adoption 'an experience'

By N. C. POLOS

THEY CAME TO STAY by Marjorie Margolies and Ruth Gruber. Coward, McCann & Geoghegan, $8.95.

This is a special kind of book for a special kind of person. The plot reads like fiction, but it is taken from actual experience proving once again that truth is indeed stranger than fiction.

(Nicholas Polos is professor of history at La Verne College.)

In a nutshell the story is about how a single parent adopted Lee Heh from Korea and Holly from Vietnam, and the unexpected adventures which follow. The book does prove that parenthood is the only job that requires no experience to obtain, but considerable experience to perform.

Marjorie Margolies, an NBC program reporter, had seen a film showing Korean orphans in a happy scene with their American families. At that time she was not ready for the commitment of marriage, had a good job and a home, and she decided to adopt one of the orphans without realizing the complications involved in dealing with adoption authorities.

Undaunted by the refusal of the adoption authorities to help her because she was single she did a singular thing. She flew to Korea where she met Lee Heh Kyung, a small, abandoned six-year-old girl, and managed to overcome impossible odds by bringing her prospective daughter home to America.

Majorie was not satisfied with this, apparently she considered children the best home furnishings, she wanted a second child — a sister for Lee Heh. Four years later she was able to take Holly under her domestic wing. Holly was half-American and half Vietnamese and came from a Saigon orphanage. Unfortunately, unlike Lee Heh's placid temperament, she was a turbulent child who seemed to consider parents one of the hardships of a minor's life, and drove Marjorie to the edge of hopelessness.

In the second part of the story Ruth Gruber, her collaborator on this book, flew to South Vietnam and South Korea to search out the dark secrets or reasons that helped to shape the lives of the children; in other words to track down the children's past.

This, in essence, is the bare-bone structure of the story. You will have to read it to gain admiration for Marjorie's fierce determination and spirit to make a home for herself and her two adopted daughters.

The story moves fast from Philadelphia to Korea to New York to Vietnam, and it is a story of love, conviction, and some small measure of personal success. It is also the story of what happens to abandoned children and the stark tragedies that befall them in war-torn countries.

The book is written in a simple style, and reflects the tribulation which a single working mother would have in attempting to bring up two children from another culture who have been suddenly thrusted into an alien world.

One could quarrel with Harriet Van Horne's statement that: "She proves that a 'single parent' is more than adequate when home is a place of love," but then one is relieved to find that since this book was written, Marjorie Margolies has married Congressman Edward Mezvinsky of Iowa, and the entire happy family lives in Washington, D.C.

This is a unique story of one woman's fight to achieve her goals, and she reflects the deep compassion for humanity so often found among Americans.

Collapse of 3rd Reich described

THE DAY BEFORE SUNRISE. By Thomas Wiseman. Holt, Rinehart & Winston. 347 Pages. $8.95.

World War II in Europe rapidly is drawing to a close. As the German armies fall back, the Russians press them from one side, the Americans and their allies from the other.

Since the Russians are advancing a bit too rapidly, American intelligence — headed by Allen Dulles — decides it would be advantageous to cook up a secret deal for the Germans to surrender quickly in Italy instead of fighting on to the end. The name of this operation is "Sunrise," and it involves all sorts of dealing and double-dealing.

Blending real people with his fictional creations, Thomas Wiseman does a fairly good job of describing the agony of the Third Reich as it slowly collapses under the steady, lethal bombing of the advancing Allies. But he is less successful when he details the unfolding of operation "Sunrise."

The plot is extremely convoluted, but involves in the main an idealistic young American named Howard Elliott and a cynical German, Reich Special Investigator Scholler.

Scholler, acting more as an envoy to the Americans for himself than for the top Nazis willing to agree to the early surrender terms, and Elliott are sent on a mission into blasted Berlin. They have a variety of adventures getting into and out of the shattered city, some interesting, some not.

Lament loss of outdoors

EDGES. By Ray Raphael. Knopf, 225 Pages. $7.95.

Ray Raphael has a great love for the open, uncrowded land and for the people who inhabit it. But that kind of land is shrinking in size daily and Raphael is deeply concerned by this. Not only by the reduction in open space but also by the gradual fading out of the lifestyles of the people who live in the open spaces.

These Raphael calls "the people of the Edges — those on the periphery of modern society who are not yet enveloped by the Metropolis. They hold one foot in the present, but the other foot is elsewhere; perhaps it is in the past — or somewhere outside of time."

The various pieces that make up "Edges" deal primarily with these people: what their lives were like before "civilization" drew so near and what they are like now that it is so close. They deal both with the older and younger generations: the old who were there from the beginning and the newly arrived, disillusioned young who came to the Edges in hope of escaping that which was slowly advancing upon their hoped-for retreat.

Actress admits life plan hard to stick with

By R.E. MORSBERGER

CHANGE LOBSTERS — AND DANCE, an Autobiography, by Lilli Palmer. Macmillan, $8.95.

"To start afresh in a new country was old hat to me," writes Lilli Palmer, who frequently, in the words of Lewis Carroll's "Lobster Quadrille," had to adjust to new situations and begin again. Looking back on her several careers as movie and stage star, painter, and now writer, she finds that things turned out quite different from what she imagined.

(Robert E. Morsberger is professor of English at Cal Poly, Pomona.)

She was born in Germany at the beginning of World War I. Her father, who fought at Verdun, was a Jew whose heritage went deep into German history and who, though an agnostic, was not about to abandon his people or the beloved fatherland that he found betrayed by the Nazis. Her mother had been an actress, and Miss Palmer resisted pressure from her surgeon father to follow him into medicine and went on the stage instead, making her debut at 17 in the Darmstadt State Theatre.

She gives a moving account of life in the Weimar Republic and the sinister suspense of being backstage in the early days of Hitler. Germans of good will could not, at first, believe the consequences of Hitler's seizure of power and hoped for the best, but the Jews soon found out what it meant, as they began entering "protective custody," the euphemism for concentration camps. Storm troopers broke up performances of non-Aryan plays and players, and Miss Palmer lost her contract because she was Jewish.

As refugees in Paris, she and her sister survived as "Les Soeurs Viennoises," singing schmalzy waltzes in crummy night clubs.

But Miss Palmer was always lucky. Just when jobs and money were running out in Paris, a Walt Disney representative was impressed by her French singing of "Who's Afraid of the Big Bad Wolf?" (Qui craint le grand mechant loup?) and introduced her to Alexander Korda, who promised her a screen test in London.

At 19, she went to England and quickly became the star of a series of forgettable films. Then she met the legendary Elsa Schreiber, who taught her acting and turned her from a young kid trying too hard to please into an artist free of mannerisms, who had taste and technique and could study every aspect of characters and dialogue.

During the war, she married Rex Harrison, and their son was born during an air raid. In 1945, she and Harrison got Hollywood contracts, and she found herself starring opposite her girlhood idol Gary Cooper in "Cloak and Dagger," directed by Fritz Lang, whose silent film of "The Nibelungs" she had reenacted as a girl.

She writes vivid vignettes of such Hollywood friends as Ronald Colman, Clark Gable, Fred Astaire, and Lauren Bacall. But she disliked pointless partying and gives a tragic account of the death of David Niven's wife during a party game.

The scandal of Rex Harrison's discovering the suicide of Carol Landis, with whom he had been having an affair, hounded the Harrisons out of Hollywood. She went on to Broadway success with "Caesar and Cleopatra" and "Bell, Book, and Candle." When Harrison was unfaithful again with Kay Kendall, she divorced him and remarried novelist and actor Carlos Thompson, with whom she lives happily in Switzerland.

Changing lobsters again, she returned to making films in Germany. She made only nine Hollywood films, only one of which "(Body and Soul)" is a classic, but Miss Palmer has been more memorable than her films. Elsa Schreiber advised her, "Don't be one of those actresses who complain all their life that they never get good parts. Make them good."

For years she worked seriously as a painter and finally had a successful show at a leading London gallery. Her autobiography became a best-seller in Europe, and deservedly so, for she writes with all the flair of a novelist.

Though she could not have total recall for conversation, she reconstructs believable dialogue for such friends and associates as George Bernard Shaw, Hellen Keller, Greta Garbo, the Windsors, Laurence Olivier, and Noel Coward, who wrote "Suite in Three Keys" for her.

Early in her career, Elsa Schreiber told her she had no charm and would have to learn it. She succeeded admirably, and her autobiography presents a warm and witty woman one would like to know.

Author deflates Lenin

By JOHN BAUSMAN
AP Book Critic

LENIN IN ZURICH. By Alexander Solzhenitsyn. Farrar, Strauss & Giroux. $8.95.

It comes as a surprise to no one that Alexander Solzhenitsyn has no fondness for Vladimir I. Lenin. In "The Gulag Archipelago," a chronicle of Soviet injustice and misery, Solzhenitsyn previously traced the ills of modern Russia and prison camp horror to the founder of the Soviet state.

In "Lenin in Zurich" Solzhenitsyn takes revenge on the Russian revolutionary leader. Using fact, imagination and cutting humor to reconstruct Lenin's thoughts and activities during his last exile in Switzerland, the author draws an unflattering, unappealing portrait of the man.

The three sections of the book — August 1914, October 1916 and March 1917 — are designed to be chapters of the author's big World War I trilogy, of which only August 1914 has yet been published. Taken out of their larger context, the Lenin chapters have valid unity and make an intriguing study of a fateful figure in the history of the 20th century.

The book opens with Lenin's flight from Austria to Switzerland at the outbreak of World War I, which caught him unawares, and covers his Swiss exile until his departure for Russia in 1917

Until the February revolution in Russia — and German scheming — save him, Lenin is depicted as a distraught, disgruntled, ineffective and misguided revolutionary caught up in Socialist bickering and petty efforts to foment a Swiss revolt.

The train of thought cleverly reflects Lenin's stiff style and awkward, almost laughable, name-calling recognizable in much Communist argument and propaganda today. Given the shortcomings of mind and character as seen by Solzhenitsyn, one wonders how Lenin was ever able to command a following that would bring him to power and keep him there.

Fair or unfair, Solzhenitsyn's study is masterful, and the novelist's art turns a potentially stale and dry account into lively reading.

Noise is No. 1 complaint in American neighborhoods

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans' biggest complaint about their neighborhoods is noise, according to a Census Bureau study released recently.

Census said the 1974 version of its annual housing survey showed 49.2 per cent of American households feel their neighborhoods are too noisy. By contrast, about a third as many — 12.1 million compared to 34.9 million — feel crime in their neighborhoods is high enough to be considered an undesirable condition.

The Census study didn't go into the sources of the noise people complained about. But Charles Elkins, deputy assistant administrator for noise control at the Environmental Protection Agency, said his agency finds that traffic and airport noise prompt most complaints.

Construction noise is also a significant problem, he said.

The Census survey showed the other most commonly cited complaints were inadequate public transportation, 37.8 per cent; heavy traffic, 31.4 per cent; inadequate street lighting, 21 per cent; streets in poor repair, 19.4 per cent, crime, 17.1 per cent; inadequate shopping facilities, 13.4 per cent, and inadequate schools, 4.2 per cent.

Despite the complaints, however, only 2.1 million, or 3 per cent, of the households living in the nation's 70.8 million occupied housing units want to move. Nearly 82 percent rated their neighborhoods good or excellent, with 2.8 per cent rating them poor.

The highest poor rating, 8 per cent, came from central city residents who rent their homes. The highest excellent rating, 48 per cent, was for people who own their own homes in suburban sections of major metropolitan areas.

Blacks rating their neighborhoods as poor accounted for 9 per cent, compared to 2.8 per cent over-all rating them poor.

In 1973, the first year the neighborhood rating was added to the annual housing survey, 79.8 per cent of all households rated their neighborhoods as good or excellent. The proportion complaining about noise in 1974 represented an increase from 45.7 per cent the year before.

The noise complaints were largest by proportion — 64.8 per cent — in central cities. They were smallest — 43.2 per cent — outside of metropolitan areas. Dissatisfaction over noise was about the same among blacks and whites.

"We have been conscious that the awareness of people in increasing," said EPA's Elkins. "It's not that there is more noise. But people are saying, 'This doesn't have to be.' It's becoming more irritating to them."

Islander, 138, gives recipe for longevity

By ROBIN ALP

BANDAR SERI BEGAWAN, Brunei (AP) — An Iban tribesman living in southern Brunei on Borneo Island claims he is 138 years old.

His recipe for longevity is a staple diet of rice, homebrewed liquor, plenty of cigarettes and a bath only once a week.

The Iban, who believes he was born in 1838, is known only as Yungkom. If he ever had any other names he has either lost interest in them or forgotten them.

A recent expedition by the Brunei Nature Society down the Ulu Belait River found him living a still healthy and happy life.

Wearing only a loose loincloth and bush hat, he still chops firewood every day to earn his board and lodging.

Yungkom said he was born near Kuching, capital of the neighboring Malaysian state of Sarawak, 138 years ago. His wizened shrunken frame tends to back up the claim.

Always a "heavy" smoker, he believes that a good spirit — or Ilmo in Malay — has helped him to survive so long.

He said he had always retained faith in his own gods and that they had always answered his prayers.

"When I was younger I used to bathe once a week in water mixed with special oils," said the tattooed tribesman. These days he says he only bathes once a week in ordinary water.

Yungkom said he used to be a salesman traveling on the rivers throughout Sarawak and Brunei selling everything from "clothes to odds and ends." He cannot remember exactly when he started his wandering career but if he was 20 it would have been in 1858.

He said he was so busy he never had time to get married and settle down. Only when he reached his "retiring age" of 88 did he move in with a rice growing family, in a house in undulating country near the Ulu Belait River. In return for food and shelter Yungkom descends the log ladder of the house every day to cut wood with his parang.

Yungkom remembers he was a "young man" of 45 when the island of Krakatoa, off Java, blew up in the mightiest volcanic explosion ever recorded. He recalls flooding and havoc from the tidal wave that hit Borneo and was felt not only in Southeast Asia but much of the world.

His back is now permanently bent and his flesh wrinkled and shrunken but his eyes are bright and alert.

As he spoke to Azizah Williams, Secretary of the Brunei Nature Society who acted as interpreter, his memory sometimes played tricks on him. But at the age of 138 nobody would blame him for that.

More unsatisfied consumers taking grievances to courts

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

An increasing number of Americans who can't get satisfaction despite the growth in complaint agencies are taking their grievances to courts and arbitration boards.

The most popular legal step is to fight it out in small claims court, with alternatives including class action lawsuits and arbitration boards set up by the Better Business Bureaus.

The atmosphere in small claims court is much more informal than in regular court. You usually don't need a lawyer (some states even ban attorneys). And it won't cost much.

Small claims courts are designed for those cases where it simply wouldn't pay to get a lawyer and invest a lot of time; the costs would be more than the damages involved.

Rules for small claims courts vary from state to state. The filing fee is relatively small — generally between $10 and $50 — and the amount of damages you can recover runs from a couple hundred to a couple thousand dollars.

"It is a poor man's court," said County Court Judge Thomas O'Connell of Dade County, Fla.

O'Connell's duties include hearing small claims or summary procedure cases as they are called in Florida. John Nelson, clerk of the civil division of the court — the part in which O'Connell works — reported 24,329 small claims cases were filed in 1975, compared to 20,904 in 1974 and 18,163 in 1973.

Why the increase? No one is sure. Nelson said a 1973 change in the law transferring some cases to small claims court that previously had been heard elsewhere might be part of the reason, although that would not account for the increase from 1974 to 1975.

"Or," he said, "it might be the economy."

The theory that people are more likely to go to court in hard times is supported by figures for the first part of this year when the recession had eased. Nelson said 3,443 small claims cases were heard in January and February this year, compared to 3,638 in the same period of 1975.

If you need legal advice during the case, you probably can get it from the court itself. In Florida, for example, O'Connell said the law requires that "the court shall assist any party not represented by an attorney" on procedure, rules or evidence and points of law.

O'Connell heard nine cases in a recent morning. They ranged from an argument over a broken windshield — smashed by the boy friend of the complainant's sister — to a case involving a used car loan.

(The annual interest rate on the loan, clearly stated in the contract, was 27.1 per cent. "Usurious," O'Connell said. "They didn't get a chance to open their mouth because they didn't have to. All I had to do was look at the contract.")

Small claims courts, of course, serve businesses as well as consumers. Landlords take tenants to small claims court. Finance companies try to collect on debts. In Dade County, O'Connell said, most of the cases involve companies suing individuals.

The class action lawsuit is more complicated and involves an attorney. Robert Sable of the National Consumer Law Center in Boston said the class action is used when so many people have the same grievance that one big suit is more practical than individual cases.

Several basic legal tests determine whether a class action suit is practical, Sable said. The issue has to present "pretty much the same fact pattern, pretty much the same law pattern, the same violations."

If you buy a television set and the picture tube is cracked, you probably don't have a class action case, Sable said. On the

A nature trail for those who can't see

CINCINNATI (AP) — Park naturalist Warren Wells says from where his trail starts, you can almost see three states. But those who travel the nature trail he created at the top of an out-of-the way hillside never will see Ohio, Kentucky or Indiana.

The nature trail is one of the country's first for the blind, and the Hamilton County Park District has left it as natural as possible.

"We want them to be able to hike in the woods as we do, smell the flowers, feel the leaves or the bark on the trees, get smacked by twigs," says Wells, who designed the halfmile trail.

"They tell me 'Mr. Wells, we want to step in mud and maybe trip a little. We've been protected too much.'"

The nature trail offers protection, but only a minimum amount. There are no concrete surfaces to walk. To Wells, losing contact with the earth means losing contact with nature.

There are no attempts to clear much of the debris, or many of the overhanging branches. Many of the obstacles are noted on the guidewire which is strung around the park.

When a group enters the trail, they grab onto a wire which leads them around. When a hiker feels one knot on the wire, it means "rough ground is ahead," such as roots, stumps, or deep slopes. Two knots means tree limbs and vines three feet ahead. Three knots direct the hiker's attention to signs, printed in braill, which discuss distinguishing characteristics of different trees.

"A person can come back several times a year and experience something different. For that matter, he can come back every day and the trail won't be exactly the same. Nature is never static," Wells noted. There may be a branch down, or the trail may be wet because of the rain.

"In fall, a person can rustle through crisp leaves and step on fallen hickory nuts. In the spring, he can touch the buds as they begin to form."

In addition to "seeing" — that is how most of Wells' groups describe it — the forest, they can also taste it.

"We take them out and say: 'There are blueberries there. Go help yourself.'"

There are animals — deer, fox and woodchuck, whose movements can be heard clearly when the wind is still. There are wild onions and flowers to be smelled and slippery elm to be tasted.

A person can be as adventurous as he wants. He can come alone or in a group. The only problem with coming in a group is that the setting is so rural, a bus cannot get to it.

Some of the users are former hikers who have gone blind and who had despaired of ever going into the woods again on anything but the arm of a guide. Many of those who take the trail are children, blind from birth. There are never many people on the trail. About 100 use it each year.

"It wouldn't matter if there were only one," Wells said. "The parks are there for all segments of our community. Why shouldn't they be enjoyed by the blind?"

Unsatisfied consumers . . .

other hand, "if a company advertises a special and you get there and they don't have it ... everybody who read that ad would be affected." A class action might be possible.

Sable said the class action suit "is a very valid and important remedy for consumers" because individual complaints usually do not involve large sums of money. The cost of a lawsuit would be more than any damages recovered.

"The main purpose of a class action suit is not really redress to the consumer," Sable added. "But it forces illegitimate dealers and lenders to comply with the law. It is one of the most effective private enforcement remedies."

Sheldon V. Burman, a New York attorney, described class action suits as a means to "give the little guy a forum."

There are arguments against class action suits, however. Seth Rosner of New York, a member of an American Bar Association committee on the issue, said: "Those who are opposed claim that class action suits have been used as blackmail." Corporations offer settlements, even where claims are unjustified, simply in order to avoid a lawsuit and the possibility of large damage awards.

Restrictions on class action suits vary in state and federal courts. The U.S. Supreme Court dealt a blow to federal class action suits when it ruled in 1974 that the plaintiff in a case involving monetary damages has to pay the cost of individually notifying all potential members of the class.

This group could include everyone who shopped at a particular store during a particular period or all the stockholders of a given company and the cost might run into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The ruling involved Morton Eisen of New York, who sued on behalf of himself and other people who bought shares on the New York Stock Exchange in less than 100-share lots. He claimed broker fees for such purchases were excessive, and said that while his own overcharge was only $70, the excess to all odd-lot buyers — some six million of them — was about $120 million. If Eisen had wanted to continue his suit, he would have had to individually notify all six million buyers.

Another major class action involved five drug companies accused of overpricing the drug tetracyclene from 1954 to 1966. The firms settled the suit in 1974, agreeing to pay $14 million to state agencies and $25 million to up to a million individuals in six states. Related lawsuits are still pending.

An individual with an unsettled dispute that he or she doesn't want to take to court can use the Better Business Bureaus system of arbitration, established with three pilot projects in 1971 and now including about 100 arbitration programs in major metropolitan areas.

The service is free. Consumer and business agree to accept the results as legal and binding. The bureau suggests arbitration if earlier attempts at resolving a dispute are unsuccessful.

"It's a very simple process," said Jesse Bogan of the National Council of Better Bureaus in Washington. Both sides "select a neutral third party from a pool of volunteers" recruited by local bureaus and trained in arbitration procedures.

It takes a maximum of 45 days from the time the two parties agree to arbitration until a decision is reached, Bogan said. Since 1971, some 2,500 cases have gone to arbitration. About 40 per cent of the decisions are in favor of the individual; 40 per cent in favor of business; and 20 per cent are mixed, Bogan said.

Florence Nicholls of the Better Business Bureau in Rochester, N.Y., said arbitration cases range from "a man claiming he was shortweighted five dozen clams" to arguments over home construction.

The Rochester bureau has a pool of 77 volunteers — "a marvelous cross-section of the community" — Mrs. Nicholls said. There is one arbiter who speaks Turkish; another is a rabbi; still others are housewives, businessmen and college professors.

Most calls to the Better Business Bureau in Rochester — up to 600 a day — don't wind up in arbitration. Sometimes they can be settled with a call to the company involved or by mediation.

Other cases simply take a little tact. Like the one involving a woman who called just after Mrs. Nicholls arrived at the bureau. "She wanted me personally to come and remove a bird's nest from over the door of a supermarket. I explained that she should call the humane society. She wanted me to call. I finally gave the society her number and a couple days later, when I was in the neighborhood, I looked and there were no birds flying around." Case closed.

Pipeline drawing foreign workers

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Foreigners have flocked here to work on the $7 billion pipeline project and many are in the country illegally, immigration and naturalization service officials say.

Joel Rogers, district immigration service director, says persons from Sweden, Germany, Mexico, Colombia, Chile, Peru, El Salvador, Guatemala, Uruguay, The Philippines, Korea, Japan, South Vietnam and other nations have been drawn to the 49th state in increasing numbers within the past year.

Rogers says most of the workers imported by employers using legal means are Canadian or British with high qualifications in highly specialized fields. But, the pipeline project also is attracting increasing numbers of illegal aliens who are arriving without jobs or authorization, Rogers said.

For example, the immigration service recently arrested two Ecudorian brothers who worked as welders' helpers on the pipeline. The two members of Pipeliners Union Local 798, headquartered in Tulsa, Okla., apparently gained membership in the labor organization by falsifying their records.

Rogers says his office receives constant reports that illegal aliens are working on the massive project, but because he has only one full-time investigator in the state "there is no way we can keep a daily vigil."

Some 140 aliens who were illegally in the United States have been apprehended in Alaska since last July, Rogers said, but only 10 per cent of them were pipeline workers. Rogers said he intends to make a sweep of the 800-mile-long project this summer when employment is expected to again reach a peak of about 20,000.

Officials say illegal aliens also infiltrate Alaska to work in the seafood processing industry. If there are no qualified United States citizens available, employers may import temporary workers with "distinguished merit and ability."

Deputy Director Donald Woessner said so far this year there have been 57 petitions from employers requesting importation of workers to Alaska from foreign nations. Such petitions first must be processed by the U. S. Labor Department, which certifies qualified residents are not available for the jobs.

Rogers said some 5 per cent of those certified are turned down for various reasons.

"Often they will try to bring in a highly qualified person for a position that does not require it," he said. "You would not need a master's degree to drive a truck on the pipeline, but there might be some PhD. who would like to come up and drive a truck for a while."

BACK SAFELY

Cincinnati's Dave Concepcion slides safely back into first base as Dodgers' Steve Garvey learns to make pickoff tag attempt in Saturday action between the two teams. Reds rallied for 6-5 victory to knock Dodgers out of sole possession of first in N.L. Western Division.

Reds overhaul Dodgers

CINCINNATI (AP) — "It seemed they were reading my mind," said Los Angeles reliever Mike Marshall, who was battered by the Cincinnati Reds for the second straight game Saturday.

"Sometimes a hitter is better than you are no matter how good you are," Marshall said after the Reds rallied for three runs in the bottom of the ninth to down the Dodgers 6-5 and move back into first place in the National League's West Division.

Joe Morgan, despite an ailing back, drove in the winning run for the second straight day with a two-out single that put the Reds five percentage points in front of Los Angeles.

"Just playing the Dodgers wakes me up," said Morgan, who had a three-run homer and a triple Friday night after a week's rest. "That was a great lift for us. We haven't been coming from behind this year.

"That's the way it used to be—and that's the way it will be," added the All-Star second baseman. "We're ready to roll. We are getting our momentum together.

"I had something to prove. I felt I needed to do something after going hitless at Los Angeles two weeks ago when my back first started bothering me."

The Reds had roughed up Marshall for four runs in one inning Friday night and wasted no time in getting to him Saturday.

"Any time he gets on the mound we do our best to beat him," said Ken Griffey, who tripled home the tying run and then scored on Morgan's single. "That's the way we feel about him. He does a lot of talking."

The nationally televised triumph also lifted the Reds back into first place in the National League's West Division, five percentage points ahead of the Dodgers, who have dropped four of their last five games.

Los Angeles starter Rick Rhoden had settled down after falling behind 2-0 in the first inning but was relieved by Marshall, 3-2, after Dave Concepcion opened the ninth with a single, the 10th hit off Rhoden.

Cesar Geronimo greeted Marshall with a single and pinch hitter Ed Armbrister sacrificed. Concepcion scored on Pete Rose's infield out but Griffey tripled off the wall in right-center and scored on Morgan's single to center.

Tony Perez started Cincinnati's comeback with a solo homer in the eighth that made it a 5-3 allgame.

Bill Russell's bases-loaded single helped the Dodgers erase Cincinnati's early lead with three runs in the second inning.

Joe Ferguson beat out an infield hit, Dusty Baker walked, Steve Yeager was hit by a pitch and Russell tied it up with a two-run single off Jack Billingham. After Rhoden's sacrifice, Dave Lopes' sacrifice fly scored the go-ahead run.

The Dodgers added a run in the fourth on Steve Garvey's solo homer and made it 5-2 in the fourth when Bill Buckner tripled home Russell, who had singled.

Cincinnati jumped to a 2-0 lead in the first inning when Griffey walked, stole second and scored on Morgan's double. George Foster, the National League's RBI leader, tripled home Morgan to extend his RBI streak to eight games, three short of Mel Ott's league record. Foster has driven in 19 runs in the last eight games while batting .500.

Rhoden, who tossed a three-hit shutout in his last start against Cincinnati, blanked the Reds from the first inning until Perez' homer in the eighth.

Janet Guthrie tries luck in World 600

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — While Janet Guthrie attracted most of the attention here last week by becoming the first woman to qualify for a major stock car race, Buddy Baker was preparing quietly for what he hopes will be his unprecedented fourth World 600 victory.

A victory today also could give the 35-year-old Charlotte native a membership in the exclusive NASCAR million-dollar club, which has only four members—Richard Petty, David Pearson, Bobby Allison and Cale Yarborough.

Any member of this select group could win the 17th annual 600-mile race over the 1.5-mile Charlotte Motor Speedway, although Pearson's Mercury appears to be a slight favorite by virtue of his 159.132 mile an hour qualifying speed which won him the pole position.

Petty will start beside Pearson in the $249,155 race after qualifying at 158.702 m.p.h.

Yarborough qualified at 157.968 for the third spot, followed in order by Allison's 157.659, Dave Marcis' 157.650 and Baker's 157.114.

"The money part I never look at until the end of the season," Baker remarked when asked if the possibility of pushing his winnings to $1 million would influence his plans for today's race.

"I think in your hometown you don't need much incentive when you're in front of the people you see every day," said Baker, whose career winnings total $971,700. "I think that's enough incentive. I run my car as well as I can each race, and just being close to a million dollars doesn't enter the picture.

"I'd like to make it where I would be a five-time winner at my home track."

The 220-pound, 6-foot-5 Baker, who looks more like a football player than a driver, is the only driver to win three World 600s.

He has won one National 500 here for a total of four victories at the Charlotte track, a feat matched only by Fred Lorenzen, who won two 600s and two 500s.

Baker, who drives a Ford prepared by Bud Moore, has run 406 assorted races during his career and last year was his best for earnings—$169,971.

Like many drivers here, Baker is not bothered by Miss Guthrie's appearance in the 600.

"Her being a girl has no bearing on my consideration of her as a driver, because I know a lot of women that are great drivers. I think my mother at one time would have made a great driver," said Baker, whose father, Buck, was one of the stock car racing's pioneers.

As for Miss Guthrie, Baker added: "You know, the thing about her being a girl is blown way out of perspective. If she's doing what she wants to, then that ought to be good enough for everybody else."

The senior Baker is attempting to make a comeback at the age of 57 after a three-year absence from racing. He failed to qualify for the 600 with a speed of 151.141 in a Chevrolet.

First place in today's race would net Baker $26,240, plus an assortment of bonuses for leading at various stages of the event.

The winnings easily would push his career earnings past the million-dollar mark.

A crowd of more than 100,000 was predicted for the World 600, which starts at 12:30 p.m.

Mounties win state titles

BAKERSFIELD — Mt. San Antonio College's Andre Hall captured the state junior college title in the 110-meter high hurdles at Bakersfield College Saturday night, winning the event with a time of 14.1

Mike Mince of host Bakersfield was second with a 14.2 clocking.

MSAC's Marcus Gordien also captured a first at the BCC track, winning the discus with a toss of 183-3. Fullerton's Steve Brown was second with a 180-1 throw.

Gordien came back to score a fifth in the shot put with a put of 53-5. Paul Santiago of American River captured that event with a 56-9.

Mountie Steve Miller was sixth in the high jump with a 6-10, first going to Glendale's Steve LaRouche who leaped 7-0. The other MSAC athlete at Bakersfield, Willie Davis, took an eighth in the 400-meter dash with a time of :48.3.

San Jose City College won the team title.

'Shoe' takes win at Hollypark

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Favored Cascapedia captured the $44,750 Honeymoon Handicap by 2½ lengths over Go March at Hollywood Park Saturday.

Willie Shoemaker kept Cascapedia close to the lead early in the 1 1-16 mile turf event, then moved his mount to a commanding lead in the stretch. Go March rallied from far back to finish second.

Dream of Spring, entered with Cascapedia, was ¾ lengths back of Go March.

The entry returned $3.60, $2.80 and $3.20. Go March paid $4.60 and $5.40.

Sandy Hawley, the nation's leading rider, enjoyed a banner day, bringing home four winners, including Masque Bleu, which returned $25.20 in the second. Masque Bleu combined with Lark's Regards, winner of the first, for a handsome $1,064.80 daily double payoff.

Maltbie holds on to Memorial lead

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) — Roger Maltbie had bogeyed three in a row. He'd seen his once-commanding five-shot lead dwindle to two strokes. He'd tip-toed barefoot through weeds and water to a minor miracle of a par on the 18th hole.

"Any time you ever get to thinking you're a better player than it is a golf course, it's gonna jump up and grab you," he said.

"All you can do is keep plugging away at it and hope you get out alive."

With that in mind, Maltbie placed little faith in his twostroke lead going into Sunday's final round of the new, $200,000 Memorial Golf Tournament.

"It is such a humbling course I might go out there and shoot 87," he said. "I don't expect it, but it could happen.

"I'll just hang on to one end of the golf club and swing it and see what happens," said the chipper young man after his varied escapades that included one whistle-producing barefoot jaunt into a weedchoked creek.

Maltbie, a 25-year-old tour sophomore, survived the menacing monster that is Muirfield despite his intimate acquaintance with the woods and water, traps and trees that characterize the 7,072 yards of Ohio countryside that Jack Nicklaus designed and constructed into the Muirfield Village Golf Club course.

The mustachioed Maltbie, a two-time winner as the 1975 rookie of the year, broke into a happy, high-stepping victory dance after his minor miracle of a par on the tough 18th hole put him through three rounds with a 212 total, four under par on what has proved to be the most difficult, most treacherous course the touring pros encounter all year.

It wasn't easy.

He had it four under par for the day at one point—then bogeyed three in a row. He lost three shots to Rod Funseth on the 15th hole. But he came right back with a birdie on the 17th then contrived a bare-foot par on the 18th. His tee shot got into knee-deep weeds in the creek. He shed shoes and socks, went after it on tip-toes, played his next down the fairway, chipped on and dropped a 10-foot putt for par that left him in command.

"I was extremely fortunate to get out of that one," he said.

Don Bies managed a one-under-par 71 that left him in second at 214. Funseth was the only other man in subpar figures after 54 holes of this tournament that seems destincd to become one of golf's classic events. He had a wildly erratic 72 that included four birdies, an eagle, four bogeys, a double bogey and eight pars. He was one under at 215.

Jerry McGee and Alan Tapie were at par 216. McGee matched par 72 and Tapie shot 71.

Some of the game's great players fell victim to the subtle terrors that make up this course.

For example, there was Johnny Miller, slashing and hacking his way to a 44 on the back nine. He stumbled wearily home on the course he calls "scary," with a 79 and a 225 total.

For example, there was Hubert Green, winner of three consecutive titles earlier this year, the season's biggest money-maker, the leader after two rounds here. Unhappy Hubert scored a double bogey, a triple bogey, a flock of bogeys and finished with 79 strokes that dropped him eight shots off the pace at 220.

For example, there was Jack Nicklaus, the greatest player of his era, the founder of this tournament, builder of the course. He had it three under for the day and was moving at the leaders when he chose to challenge the par-three 12th, where the pin was tucked to the left front, near the lake.

Nicklaus popped one in the water. He reloaded and fired again, but the result was the same. On his third try he got it on dry land—but well off the green. He chipped down to about 10-12 feet and dropped that difficult putt for a quadruple bogey seven. He walked off with a resigned shrug of the shoulders and a wry smile. It led to a 73 and a 219 total.

Indy goes today

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — For Johnny Rutherford, it's a chance to prove that he was cheated a year ago. For Bobby Unser, it's a chance to prove that he wasn't.

Last year, the Indianapolis 500-mile auto race became the Indianapolis 435, marked down for one day only by a sudden thunderstorm that turned the sleek racers into helpless hydroplaning hunks of metal which fishtailed their way along Indy's banked 2.5-mile track.

Rutherford was running first in the 1975 Memorial Day classic when he decided to pull into the pits for a little shot of gasoline. When he pulled back out, he was second to Unser—and he was left there shortly thereafter when the rains came.

Rutherford insisted, not without some justification, that he could have won that race (it would have been his second triumph here) if the track hadn't been reduced to a wading pool. And Unser agreed that luck as well as skill had brought him his second Indy victory and the accompanying $214,031 in total prize money.

Rutherford, who settled for the $97,886 runnerup purse, set out with a vengeance to prove he deserves to be No. 1 this year. He qualified his DrakeOffenhauser in the pole position with a speed of 188.957 miles an hour while Unser had to settle for the 12th position, outside the fourth row, in the 33-car field, qualifying his Eagle Drake-Offy at 187.520 m.p.h.

The mammoth spectacle which annually attracts hundreds of thousands of race fans and revelers to this sprawling monument to speed is, of course, anything but a two-man race. There are 31 other drivers, some new to this sort of madness and some grizzled veterans, out to dethrone Unser.

There's Mario Andretti, the 1969 Indy winner but a hardluck driver here the past few years, knocked out of action early by mechanical problems or minor wrecks.

His qualifying speed of 189.414 m.p.h. was the fastest of any entry, but because it came on the second weekend of qualifying, he was relegated to the inside of the seventh row, 19th in the field. Competing in European Grand Prix races prevented him from first-weekend qualifying and knocked him back in the pack.

There's Al Unser, like his brother, Bobby, a two-time winner (1970-71) but a distant alsoran since finishing second in 1972. He's starting on the inside of the second row.

There's Gordon Johncock, starting next to Ruthford in the first row. He was the winner of the rain-shortened 1973 race, the last disastrous Indy. It was a year in which Art Pollard was killed in practice, in which Salt Walther was critically burned in a multi-car crash that aborted the race on one day, in which Swede Savage was killed in a flaming crash during the race and a crewman was killed by a truck racing to Savage's rescue.

There's Tom Sneva, whom many race fans figured would never live through last year's race, when his car hit the wall and exploded. Amazingly, he was only slightly burned in the wreck and is back as the outside starter in the front row.

There's ol' A.J. Foyt, who's been trying since 1967 to become Indy's first four-time winner. He's in good position to get it this year, starting in the middle of the second row between Al Unser and Pancho Carter, who has finished seventh and fourth in his two previous starts.

And there's the favorite of all of life's losers, Llyod Ruby. He's been trying—and failing— every year since 1960 to win this thing.

There are names like Billy Vukovich and Gary Bettenhausen, names which exhume the ghosts of racers past. Each one's father was a racer here and each one died in flaming wrecks.

There are names like Carter and Johnny Parsons, whose fathers also raced here but who survived to retire and still prowl around this old brickyard each race day, reliving old memories.

There are names like Vern Schuppan, Billy Scott, Al Loquasto and Spike Gelhausen, rookies in this race. Schuppan was the best of them in qualifying, slipping into the middle of the sixth row.

Noticeably absent from the field is Janet Guthrie, who smashed down Indy's sexual barriers simply by becoming the first woman ever to make an official run on this ancient track.

She did it a few weeks ago, passing her driving test with flying colors, a step that enabled her to qualify for this 60th annual Indy 500. But in qualification runs, her car let her down.

Foyt, in a gallant display of chivalry, loaned Janet his backup car, just to see what she was capable of doing with a truly sound machine. What she did was register better than 181 m.p.h., a speed which most certainly would have made her the first woman ever to start an Indy 500.

But since Foyt's car was only loaned to her for that "Let's see what she's made of" run and not for qualifying—and since her own machine was woefully inadequate, she failed to make the field. Instead, her performance earned her an invitation to compete in Sunday's World 600 in Charlotte, N.C.

Above all, though, are the fans—the swarming mass of humanity which sandwiches itself into the more than 250,000 seats. And they're only a part of the crowd.

There are another hundred thousand or so who pour into the infield, seeing little—if any—of the race.

It's a chunk of Americana unmatched by any other event on earth. It's been described as everything from a death watch to a religious experience, from the best way to watch a true test of man and machine to the wildest way to scarf down a bunch of fried chicken and a couple of six packs—and maybe to hustle up a sunburn.

For the optimists, there are memories of great, close races, of winners and losers decided by scant seconds, by strategy and, occasionally, by pure luck.

For the pessimists, there are memories of the hellish crashes that took the lives of human beings—drivers, mechanics, spectators.

And for the bottom-liners who measure success in terms of wealth, there is the more than $1 million in prize money for grabs in the three hours or so of shrieking machines and people which, once evey year, turn this old brickyard into a frenzy of sound and fury signifying ... well, they've never really figured that out.

Angels come alive to nab twinbill

By BILL LANGLEY
PB Sports Editor

ANAHEIM — The Angel hitters finally gave hard luck pitchers Sid Monge and Gary Ross some support Saturday night as the Halos took both games from the first-place Kansas City Royals for their first doubleheader sweep at Anaheim Stadium since June 24, 1970.

It also took some luck.

Recently, only southpaw Frank Tanana has been blessed with any runs as the other Angel pitchers have been doing well but had little to show for it. It looked like the same story for most of Saturday.

Monge, the former Alta Loma High pitcher, picked up his second victory of the season in the opener when the Angels came up with three runs after two outs in the bottom of the ninth to pull out a 3-2 victory.

Ross also earned his second win in the nightcap when his teammates broke open a 1-1 deadlock by scoring six runs in the bottom of the eighth for a final 7-2 score.

The play of the night came in the ninth inning of the first game. With two outs and runners on first and third, Ron Jackson hit a drive to right when appeared headed for rightfielder Al Cowens but Cowens fell down going for the ball and it ended up as a triple to tie the score.

Andy Etchebarren quickly ended it with a line drive single up the middle on Mark Littell's 3-1 pitch.

"It was beautiful," Monge said about the ninth inning uprising. "I was still in the dugout. That rally was just great for this club."

It was also great for Monge, who picked up his first major league victory before the home fans at the Big A and enjoyed his first complete game of the season.

"I had pretty good command of my pitches," the former Etiwanda resident said. "I also didn't get that tired and I felt pretty strong all the way."

Manager Dick Williams was impressed by Monge, who scattered nine hits and allowed only one walk.

"He became a pitcher tonight," Williams said about the lefthander. "He didn't have his good fastball tonight but he learned to go with his other stuff."

Kansas City's two runs off of Monge came across in the second and fifth innings. Fred Patek doubled, John Wathan singled and Jim Wohlford brought Patek home with a sacrifice fly in the fifth.

Meanwhile, sore-armed Steve Busby and reliever Steve Mingori held the Angels to three harmless singles until the fateful ninth. The big rally started when Bobby Bonds beat out an infield single on a broken-bat hit. Mingori retired the next two batters for Kansas City Manager Whitey Herzog played the percentages in bringing in the righthanded Littell to play pinch-hitter Bill Melton. But Littell walked Melton and Jackson followed with the triple.

Ross scattered six hits in the nightcap until he ran out of gas after one out in the ninth when Paul Hartzell came out of the bullpen to save the win.

Kansas City scored an unearned run on two Angel errors in the fourth and added a second tally in the ninth.

Meanwhile, the Angels couldn't solve Al Fitzmorris. The only run until the big inning in the eighth came across on singles by Jackson and Etchebarren plus Dave Chalk's sacrifice fly in the fifth.

Renny's infield hit opened the eighth and Bonds' single finished Fitzmorris. Bruce Bochte greeted reliever Tom Hall with a single to put the Angels ahead, 2-1.

ANGEL ANGLES — The homestand ends today at 1 p.m. with Don Kirkwood (1-5) facing Dennis Leonard (4-1).

Bell's vault sets record

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — Earl Bell of Arkansas State University shattered the world pole vault record Saturday night with an 18-7¼ vault at the U.S. Track and Field Federation championships in Wichita.

Bell's vault was a full inch better than the 1975 record set by Dave Roberts of the Florida Track Club and far above Bell's own meet record of 17-8 set here a year ago.

Bell cleared the bar on his first try after Terry Porter of Tyler, Tex., Junior College failed to make the height.

Bell, whose best vault this year was 18-3½, rolled out of the cushion and pranced around the field as a crowd of more than 8,900 jumped to its feet and cheered the new world mark.

Indians peddle Fritz Peterson

CLEVELAND (AP) — Cleveland Indians pitcher Fritz Peterson has been traded to the Texas Rangers for pitcher Stan Perzanowski and an undisclosed amount of cash, Indians general manager Phil Seghi said Saturday.

Peterson, 34, who came to the Indians in 1974 in a trade with the New York Yankees, had a 14-8 record last year, top's on the club.

GETTING READY — Workman Frank Myales sweeps loose cement from between the bricks at the finish line of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway Saturday in preparation for today's 500-mile race. The bricks at the finish line are the only remaining bricks of the original track that was entirely paved with bricks when the track was first laid out in 1909.

Dibbs loses in net semis

ROME (AP) — Top-seeded Guillermo Vilas of Argentina crushed Eddie Dibbs of Miami, Fla. 6-1, 6-3, 6-2 and Adriano Panatta of Italy beat John Newcombe of Australia 6-2, 6-4, 6-4 Saturday to qualify for the men's singles final in the Italian International Tennis Open.

Mima Jausovec of Yugoslavia spoiled Leslie Hunt's 26th birthday by defeating her 6-1, 6-3 and taking the women's singles title. It was the first major international win for the 19-year-old Yugoslav girl, the Wimbledon junior champion.

The match between Vilas and Dibbs was technically boring, with endless duels from the baseline.

Vilas, however, showed occasional signs of his class, placing some nice spinning lobs on the rare occasions Dibbs came to the net, and hit his backhands down the line to keep Dibbs on the run throughout.

It was the first time the Argentine made it into the final here. Manuel Orantes of Spain and Bjorn Borg of Sweden have beaten him in previous semifinal matchups.

Vilas did not play well, but he was never really in trouble against Dibbs, who beat Mark Edmondson of Australia in the quarterfinals on Friday after the Australian suffered a leg cramp.

Vilas shot off to a service break at love in the first game, broke again in the fifth and seventh games as Dibbs missed too many corners. The American scored his only service break in the first game of the second set, at love, and led 3-1.

But Vilas rallied to 3-3 and managed to win the seventh game after trailing 15-40 and an endless number of deuces. The loss appeared to crack the American's concentration and Vilas won seven straight games.

Vilas looked exhausted after the match.

"The American plays back all the time and he keeps on hitting the ball back, trying to tire you out," the Argentine said. "He never gives up."

Panatta thrilled the crowd of 7,000 at the Foro Italico center court by beating Newcombe, one of the world's best-known players who has won nearly everything in his career.

The Italian served well, scored with perfect lobs and excellent passing shots down the line, as he displayed cool nerves and calm despite his controversial quarter-final match against American Harold Solomon Friday.

Solomon, from Silver Spring, Md., was leading 2-6, 7-5, 5-4 and was serving when he disputed a line call. After arguing for several minutes with deputy referee Carlo Nistri, he left the court.

Against Newcombe, Panatta never lost his service, the key to his victory.

Magee wins gym honors

Claremont High's Jill Magee has been named "most valuable gymnast" by the coaches of the Hacienda League gymnastic teams at an awards banquet held Thursday.

The Claremont gymnasts, under coach Mary Manley, are undefeated in their two-year reign as champions of the Hacienda League.

Magee, who is a sophomore at CHS, also received the school's "most valuable team member" award for the second straight year. She is a tough competitor working on beam, uneven parallel bars, and vault and floor exercises.

Two of Magee's teammates also received awards, Nancy Schick and Terry Cohen. Schick, a senior, is a specialist on beam and floor exercises, while Cohen, a sophomore, got the award for her performance on beam and vault.

Those three outstanding performers, as well as Pam Kinsey and Donna Myers represented the Hacienda League in CIF competition.

Hammond is MVP in CL

Four players and coach Wally Becker of American Christian Academy received recognition in the Christian League all-league balloting.

Becker was named coach of the year. Pitcher Greg Hammond earned Most Valuable Player honors. Catcher Blaine Hammond and pitcher-outfielder Jim Keith were also first-team selections. Third baseman Tim Faulkner made the second team.

Greg Hammond posted a 7-2 record and a 1.82 earned run average in league play and averaged two strikeouts per inning.

The Minutemen finished with a 9-1 record in league play and were 15-5 overall.

Turf 'Cap attracts top mares

Twelve of the West's top grass-running horses, including the richest mare in thoroughbred racing history, go to the post Monday in the $200,000 Hollywood Invitational Turf Handicap at Hollwyood Park.

Dahlia, who recently won an allowance race to become the all-time king of the distaff horses, will carry 117 pounds including Bill Shoemaker in the 1½-mile feature. Dahlia has won $1.4 million, with most of her racing done in Europe.

Top-weighted in the race, however, is Avatar, an eight-time winner in his 27 career starts including the Belmont Stakes a year ago. Avatar will tote 122 pounds, with rider Laffit Pincay Jr.

Slate tourney for racquetball

SAN DIEGO — Thirty-two nationally ranked professional racquetball players will compete in the $15,000 Leach-Seamco Pro National Championship to be played at the Atlas Health Club in Mission Valley in June.

The winner earns $4,000 — the largest purse ever awarded in a racquetball tournament — and recognition as the national champion.

In addition to the pro event, more than 400 amateurs are expected to compete in a variety of age divisions for national titles.

Tournament director Jerry Sandstrom, senior vice president of Atlas Hotels, said that amateur competition will begin June 13 with the pro tourney running June 16-19.

The Leach-Seamco event is the culmination of the seven-tourney pro series with San Diego area players dominating both the results and the seedings for the championship.

Charles Brumfield, 27, of San Diego has won three of the pro events this season and is the defending national champion. He will be top-seeded in the June tournament, which is sanctioned by the National Racquetball Club.

Second-seeded Marty Hogan has won a pair of NRC events and at 18 is the youngest pro on tour. A resident of St. Louis, Hogan will move to San Diego next month and enroll at San Diego State. The other NRC-tourney win was by Richard Wagner, 20, a student at the University of San Diego.

The remaining top-10 seeds for the championship are David Bledsoe, Memphis; Steve Serot, San Diego; Bill Schmidtke, Minneapolis; Steve Strandemo, San Diego; Steve Keeley, San Diego; Mike Zietman, Memphis; and Ron Rubenstein, Chicago.

Seeds are based on NRC tourney earnings throughout the 1975-76 series.

Brumfield long has been considered the sport's top player and regained the national title by first edging Serot, 21-20, 21-20, in the semi-finals and whipping Strandemo, 21-6, 21-9, in the finals of last year's national event.

He, along with other top-ranked players is on the playing staff of Leach, the tournament co-sponsor and San Diego-based manufacturer of over 85 percent of the racquetball racquets used throughout the world.

In the women's pro competition, defending champion Peggy Steding of Odessa, Tex., is top-seeded with San Diego's Jan Campbell seeded fourth. Other seeds are Janell Marriott, Salt Lake, second; Shannon Wright, Houston, third; and Cathy Williams, Detroit, fifth.

The 22,000-square foot Atlas Health Club has seven racquetball courts, including two all-glass championship courts. Seating is limited to 300 persons and tickets are now available at $100 per seat admitting to all seven days of the tournament. In addition, general admission tickets at $5 will be sold for each day's schedule.

LeFlore isn't upset

DETROIT (AP) — Detroit Tiger outfielder Ron LeFlore is philosophical about the end of his 30-game hitting streak.

"Look, you're either going to get a hit or your're not. And I didn't get one," he said after Friday night's game with the New York Yankees, which New York won 9-5.

"How can I be disappointed," he said quietly. "Either you're going to get a hit or you're not. Today just happened to be a day when I didn't get a hit. Tomorrow, I'll just have to go out and see if I can get a hit again."

The nearest LeFlore came to a base hit was a weak fly ball to shallow right field in the bottom of the first inning and a ground ball to third base in the third, as Yankee pitcher Ed Figueroa and Tippy Martinez teamed up to shut out the Tiger center fielder, who failed to get a hit for the first time this season.

The last time LeFlore was up, in the bottom of the eighth inning, he struck out after fouling off a desperation bunt attempt.

"I didn't really make good contact in the whole game," LeFlore said. Friday night, he was 0-for-4 with a fly ball, two infield grounders and the strikeout.

"He made a good pitch on that strikeout," LeFlore admitted.

The 19,909 fans in Tiger Stadium cheered LeFlore each time he stepped to the plate.

Youths win in handball

The Ontario Recreation Department, in conjunction with the Ontario-Montclair School District, recently conducted a handball tournament for junior high students.

De Anza Junior High won the seventh grade team title, outpointting Imperial 18 to five. Imperial claimed the eighth grade title with nine points to De Anza's eight.

In the eighth grade singles finals, Bob Bonilla of Imperial defeated Carlos Galicia of Imperial for individual honors. The eighth grade doubles team of Scot Avery and Kevin O.'Brien of Vernon downed Tony Herrera and Rich Garcia of De Anza to claim the title.

Alex Venegas if Imperial won the seventh grade singles title by beating Raul Bermudes of De Anza. The duo of Dave Chavez and Sam Rodriguez took top honors in the seventh grade doubles competition, defeating the De Anza pair of Bermudes and Javier Diaz in the finals.

Nelson event: scramble time

By PHIL ROCHE
PB Golf Writer

They'll be a whole lot of scramblin' going on Friday when just about all the famous and infamous golfers in the valley get together for Ed Nelson's frolic.

NELSON'S SIXTH ANNUAL CELEBRITY Golf Tournament will be held at Via Verde Country Club and over 30 celebrities from T.V., movies and the sports world have been invited to join area golfers in the very popular "scramble shot-gun" tournament play.

Check-in time will be 12:30 p.m. Completing the day's activities will be a cocktail hour at 6 p.m. followed by dinner and celebrity entertainment at 7 p.m.

The cost is $23 per person or $42 per couple, which includes golf, cart, prizes, prime rib dinner. Golf only is $15 per person or $24 per couple.

Separate dinner tickets at $10 each include swimming and tennis in the afternoon. Reservation deadline is Tuesday.

Foursomes will be filled out, and all teams will be fivesomes with a celebrity as the fifth player. All proceeds will be used for the many community projects sponsored by the San Dimas Chamber of Commerce.

While we're on the subject of tournaments, the Glendora High School football boosters will hold their annual event on Friday at San Dimas Canyon. It's a good one.

Dick Jackson, former Azusa High golf coach, is one of the chairmen for the tourney, which looms as a top-flight one. Entry fee is $20.

The second phase of qualifying for the Western Amateur Golf Association summer tour will end today at Pomona National with 180 players competing for 120 spots.

Ninety-four golfers competed for 70 spots in the first weekend of qualifying last Saturday and Sunday at Whispering Palms and El Camino.

Ray Vanyo of Quail Lake and Bill Viele of Massacre Canyon led the first-week qualifying with scores of 145, one stroke ahead of Randy Lassiter of Victoria.

Monte Money of Las Vegas qualified at 147 along with John Milford of UCLA and shot the best round, a par-72, at El Camino. All the scores, except for Money and a few others, were four or five strokes higher at El Camino because the greens were rock-hard and the fairways were not in good condition.

The 11-week summer tour, open to amateurs who either qualify or were among the leading players last year, begins on June 14 at Mission Viejo. A minimum of $1,000 in prizes will be given each weekend.

Leading qualifiers from Whispering Palms and El Camino:

145 — Ray Vanyo, Quail Lake, 72-73; Bill Viele, Massacre Canyon, 73-72.

146 — Randy Lassiter, Victoria, 70-76.

147 — Monte Money, Las Vegas, 75-72; John Milford, UCLA 70-77.

148 — Mike Smith, El Camino, 73-75.

149 — Dan Kras, San Marcos, 70-79.

150 — Lennie Clements, Poway, 71-79; Ken Teel, El Niguel, 72-78.

151 — Robert Stevens, Mt. San Jacinto, 75-76.

152 — Greg Galasso, Encinitas, 74-78; Rick Hestley, Bakersfield, 73-79.

153 — Steve Hakes, Coronado, 76-77; Gary Schwartz, Tustin, 76-77; Jay Featherstone, Fallbrook, 80-73; Richard Rawdin, Woodland Hills, 73-80.

Paula Kim of Inglewood was among five girls who attempted to qualify, four of whom made the grade. Paula shot 79-80 — 159, beating Irene Zuniga of River View by three strokes. Sue Stanley and Barbara Wilson were the other two qualifiers.

FOUR PLAYERS were in the 70s for the annual Firehouse Inn tourney Wednesday at San Dimas Canyon. Dr. Bill Walker of Pomona led the way with a classy two over par 74 to win low gross honors. Also in the 70s were Nick Markolis (75), Cecil Romero (77) and Steve Johnson (78).

Low net winners for A flight was Ed Reinsch with a 62. Other top finishers were Max Posix, George Fortner and Dan Wilson.

B flight low gross winner was Jim Egan with a 92; Jim Sullivan also shot 92 but lost the playoff. Low net victor was George Sawyer with a 69 and Bob Mayer was second. Jack Todd scored an eagle to finish third with a 71.

C flight low gross winners: Harry Hanneman and Jim Haidet with 98s.

Net winners: Sandy Sanders and Jim Wick.

Longest drive for the event was hit by Mark Yakovich with a poke estimated at 295 yards. Closest to the pin winner at No. 10 was Chet Randall. At No. 16, Ron Kowstick won with Harry Hanneman second.

KATIE DEAL won the Diamond Bar Women's club championship recently with a 267 total. Ruth Day was runnerup with a 272 for the event. Congratulations are in order.

Suns try homecourt edge

PHOENIX (AP) — The homecourt advantage, often discussed and often disdained, will be in the Phoenix Suns' favor today when they try to slow the Boston Celtics' steamroller in the National Basketball Association championship series.

"They're going out there with their backs to the wall," Celtics Coach Tom Heinsohn said Friday before the Suns departed from Boston's unfriendly atmosphere, trailing 2-0 in the best-of-7 nationally-televised series.

"They're going to be in front of their home crowd," continued Heinsohn. "They'll have the sun, the heat, the pools and all that jazz.

"We have the banners and the flags flying and the numbers hanging which is our thing," said Heinsohn referring to the 12 NBA championship pennants hanging from the rafters in Boston Garden and separate banners emblazoned with the numbers of the all-time great players in their storied history.

"Their crowd will pick them up," the effusive Heinsohn said. "It will be just like in Cleveland. It was a big factor in Cleveland and I think it will be a big factor in Phoenix."

In Cleveland, playing before a record playoff crowd of over 21,000, the Celtics lost games 3 and 4 of their semifinal series against the Cavaliers, scoring under 90 points each time before coming back for a clinching 94-87 victory in game 6.

Phoenix' Veterans Memorial Coliseum—the site of the third and fourth games of this series, today and Wednesday night—isn't nearly as large as the new Cleveland Coliseum in Richfield Township, Ohio, but when filled to its capacity of 13,036—as is expected—its fans can create tremendous excitement and stimulation for the fans.

This is the first time the Suns have reached the final round in their eight-year history and the disappointment of two straight losses in Boston—98-87 and 105-90—doesn't figure to dull the enthusiasm of the Phoenix fans.

They showed they still were strongly behind the underdog Suns Friday with a pep rally at Veterans Memorial Coliseum for the team upon its arrival from Boston.

The Celtics, still basking in the glow of their easy victory but still wary of the Suns potential, did not leave Boston until Friday night and were due in Phoenix late.

But before departing, Celtics forward Paul Silas said, "We're going to their home court and they'll have the crowd with them. It's going to be a different atmosphere altogether."

Indeed it should be.

Whereas in Boston, where they were soundly booed and the Celtics were loudly cheered, the beleaguered Suns can expect the reverse treatment at home.

And whereas in Boston, the Celtics had many statistical advantages, the Suns will have that at Phoenix.

Phoenix, meanwhile, has won 17 of its last 18 home games— its only setback to 1975 NBA champion Golden State in the semifinals.

"We have to forget about what's happened and go back to Phoenix...and when we come back here next Friday it (the series) will be 2-2," said the Suns' Garfield Heard following Boston's second-game victory Thursday night.

Phoenix Coach John MacLeod was not nearly as optimistic about his team's chance of preventing a Celtics runaway.

"I don't think that just because we're going home means that things will be great," he said. "We have to do better on offense and defense. We have to be more patient. We know what they're going to do. If we allow them to bump and shove and we don't move, we're not going to do much."

The Suns' shooting has been a woeful 74 for 191, a .387 percentage and well below their regular-season norm of .472. They have been badly outrebounded, 134-102, and they have permitted the Celtics' pressure defense to disrupt their disciplined pattern style of play.

Defensively, they have failed to stop the Celtics' smooth-flowing offense. In game 1, Boston capitalized on the Suns' gamble of leaving the weakside guard open, and Jo Jo White popped in 20 points in the second half. And in game 2, the Celtics staggered the Suns with a 20-2 burst in the opening five minutes of the third period.

"Any team that tries to run with us can't do it," pointed out White, referring to the Suns' mistakes in the decisive minutes of the second game.

"I expect them to be more aggressive now and carry the flow and tempo of the game," said Jim Ard, Boston's reserve center. "They will have the home crowd behind them and they will be better off. And I think they'll start hitting their shots."

Today's game begins at 10:30 a.m., PDT.

Asked about the last time he had played that early, White said, "Back home in the school yard. That's the only time I can remember."

Swipes not helping slumping Oakland

OAKLAND (AP) — The Oakland A's refuse to believe their early season base-running success can be attributed to the fact the team has been going mostly downhill.

"We stole 10 bases in 10 attempts and lost a doubleheader. We stole 15 times in 15 tries in two games at Minnesota and lost both of them. That's a sin," Manager Chuck Tanner exclaimed in frustration at one point.

Oakland fielding sins—51 errors in the first 40 games—and weak hitting enabled the A's to lose eight games in a row although the club was stealing bases at a rate no major league baseball team has matched since the turn of the century.

With three-quarters of the season left, the team that sacrificed power in trading away Reggie Jackson, had almost 100 stolen bases. The A's had 93 stolen bases in 120 attempts, a 77 per cent success record through games of Tuesday night.

The modern big league record is 347 steals in 1911 by the New York Giants. The American League record is 289 by the 1913 Washington Senators.

Three of the American League's top four base stealers are A's—Bill North, Don Baylor and Bert Campaneris.

"We're going to have all the leaders at the end of the season," predicted North, who led the American League in steals with 54 two years ago and is confident he can top that figure since Tanner gives the base runners a lot more freedom than former A's manager Alvin Dark did.

"We run whenever it's feasible," explained North. "Alvin wanted us to stay at first in some situations so hitters like Reggie would get more fastballs to hit. I'm not trying to criticize him—that's what he believed in—but I'd rather be hitting with a runner in scoring position."

Tanner, citing the early season injury to Gene Tenace and the batting troubles of Sal Bando, Campaneris, Baylor, Billy Williams and Claudell Washington, said, "Once we start hitting like we should, we're going to have a big edge. Every catcher we face will be saying to himself, 'The A's are going to be running, so I've got to call for a lot of fastballs.'"

Tanner expects North, Campaneris and Baylor to steal at least 40 bases apiece, along with Washington who led the team last season with 40 steals. Those are conservative estimates, he adds, since the foursome combined for 67 thefts through 40 games.

"And our two pinch runners, Matt Alexander and Larry Lintz, should get about 30 each," Tanner added, making another conservative prediction since Alexander and Lintz combined for 18 steals in their first 20 attempts.

Ring hopefuls set for Olympic trials

CINCINNATI (AP) — A strong heavyweight division tops the list of 88 of the nation's top boxers who begin arriving in Cincinnati this week for the four-day Olympic trials.

"The heavyweight division is loaded," said Rolly Schwartz, manager of the U.S. Olympic boxing team. "In my book, any of the top five could beat Jimmy Young right now."

Described by Schwartz as "an excellent young team" seasoned by international experience, the field of fighters start the survival shakedown Wednesday in the new 17,000-seat Riverfront Coliseum.

The 11 Olympic berths will be filled with the winners of Saturday night's finals. Second place finishers will serve as alternates, hopeful of an Olympic miracle such as Joe Frazier's in 1964, when he replaced an injured Buster Mathis and went on to a gold medal at Tokyo.

The only Olympic veteran among the candidates is featherweight Davey Armstrong, who competed in Munich four years ago at age 17.

The glittering heavyweight division promises to be the main attraction, although local interest is running high over three Cincinnati entries, including gold medal candidate Aaron Pryer, a classy 132-pounder who recently won back-to-back Golden Gloves titles.

"You could flip a coin between the heavyweights. That's how close it will be," said Schwartz.

Heading the heavyweight competition is Michael Dokes, who is aiming for a rematch in Montreal with 1972 gold medalist Teofilo Stevenson, the Cuban who beat the Akron teenager in the Pan Am finals last October.

His chief challengers are Jimmy Clark, who stunned highly-regarded Russian Igor Visotski, a powerful puncher who handed Stevenson a rare defeat; Marvin Stinson, who has beaten three top Russians; Johnny Tate, a narrow loser to Dokes; and Woody Clark.

"They'll all be turning pro after the Olympics," predicts Schwartz, who is the Amateur Athletics Union (AAU) boxing chairman.

Schwartz says America's prime medal candidates are 139-pounder Ray Leonard, the Pan Am champ; 147-pounder Clinton Jackson, light heavyweight Leon Spinks, Armstrong and Pryor.

"Leonard is one of the classiest boxer-punchers I've seen," says Schwartz. "He already compares to Muhammad Ali and Sugar Ray Robinson at the same stage of their careers."

Jackson is the only amateur to win four national AAU titles and three Golden Gloves crowns. He stamped himself as Olympic material with a victory in the Pan Am finals over Cuba's Emilio Correa, the 1972 Olympic gold medalist.

Spinks enters the trials with a string of 11 straight first-round knockouts. Pryor brings the best record to the meet, a 206-15 mark which includes 11 straight international triumphs.

Schwartz said there will be no convicts among the 88 contenders this year, due to a ruling by Olympic officials.

Stanford coach to hold football clinic

LOS ANGELES — Head football coach Jack Christiansen and his entire staff at Stanford University will conduct a clinic Saturday, July 17, which will be sponsored by the Shrine All-Star Football Classic.

The announcement was made today by game director John Mershon of the sponsoring Al Malaikah Shrine Temple.

The clinic will run from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Elks Lodge, 400 West Colorado Blvd., Pasadena.

Joining Christiansen in conducting the clinic will be his assistants Norb Hacker, defensive linebackers; Gunther Cunningham, defensive line; Willie Shaw, secondary defense; Dave Currey, offensive backs; Pete Kettela, receivers; Doug Single, offensive line, and Don Freese, freshman-junior varsity.

Christiansen played on three world professional championship teams — the Detroit Lions in 1953-54-57. He was captain and the ace defensive back with the Lions.

The Lions defensive backfield in those days were called Chris'Crew. In addition to Christiansen, the defensive Lions backs included Yale Lary, Jim David and Bob Smith.

The clinic will be open to all football coaches from universities, colleges, junior colleges, high school, junior high schools, and Pop Warner teams.

Registration forms may be secured by writing to Shrine Football Office 655 West Jefferson Blvd., Los Angeles, Ca. 90007.

Darby signs with Seattle

SEATTLE (AP) — The Seattle Seahawks of the National Football League announced Tuesday the signing of five of their college draft choices, including sixth-round pick Alvis Darby from Florida.

Darby, a 6-foot-4, 216-pound tight end, caught 21 passes in his Florida career.

Other signees included punter Keith Muehr, an 11th-round pick from Southwestern Louisiana; running back Andy Reid, a 13th-round pick from Georgia; defensive back Jarvis Blinks, a 14th-round choice from Northwestern Louisiana; and guard Jeff Urczyk, a 16th round selection from Georgia Tech.

The first-year NFL club now has signed contracts with 65 players, including six draft choices, 22 free agents and 37 of 39 players obtained in the veteran allocation.

SOVIET GIANT — Uliana Semenova (No. 6), the USSR's 7-foot-2 woman cage star, is shown here in 1973 World University Games vs. US in Moscow. Thanks largely to Semenova, the Soviets are heavy favorites in upcoming Olympic Games women's basketball competition.

American women cage underdogs

NEW YORK (AP) —The tallest member of the U.S. Olympic basketball team is 6 feet 4, and the average height of the squad is only about 5-10. But the coach is optimistic that the Americans will emerge as challengers to the heavily favored Soviets and their 7-foot-2 center.

It's not that the Americans are short. It's just that 7-2 is tall for a woman.

For the first time in Olympic history, women, led by the Soviet center Uliana Semenova, will be competing for medals in basketball. The six-team roundrobin tournament begins Monday, July 19 at Montreal's Etienne Desmarteau Centre, site of what probably will shape up as a USA-USSR duel among the men.

The top three finishers in the World Championships at Cali, Colombia—the Soviet Union, Japan and Czechoslovakia—are assured of berths for the women's tournament. Canada also automatically was entered as the host nation. But the United States and nine other nations must compete for the other two spots in a qualifying round at Hamilton, Ont., beginning the last week in June.

"I think that there is no question that the USSR is favored. They haven't lost in six or seven years of international competition," Billie Jean Moore, head coach of the U.S. team and coach at Cal State-Fullerton, said. "But if we get in, and there's no reason we shouldn't, then I'd have to say we're very much in contention for a medal."

The United States, which is practicing at Central Missouri State University in Warrenburg, Mo., drew North Korea, Poland, France and Mexico in Group A of the qualifying round. In Group B are South Korea, Bulgaria, Italy, Cuba and Great Britain. After roundrobin play, the top two teams in each group meet to determine who will get the two Olympic berths.

"The only thing I can go by," said Coach Moore of the United States' chances to qualify, "is that Italy and South Korea finished fourth and fifth in the World Championships. Mexico was No. 2 to us in the Pan Am Games, and France has a strong team."

Charlotte Lewis of Illinois State University is the tallest American team member at 6-4, but Miss Moore says the nucleus of what she calls a well-balanced team is Nancy Dunkle, of Cal State-Fullerton; Lusia Harris of Delta State; Ann Meyers of UCL. and Julie Simpson of Gallup, N.M.

"They've had previous international experience and we're looking to them to give us a lot of leadership," she said.

The women will play by international rules, using both zone and one-on-one defense. "International rules are similar to what we play, but it's much more physical," she said. "The adjustment is sort of like a college player going into pro basketball."

The record shows that some teams look like collegians against pros when they face the Soviets. In late April, some of the U.S. Olympic team members played the Russians during a Soviet tour of the States.

"We lost by four points the first night and by 23 the second night," Coach Moore said. "We had only been together a week or two and we were pretty proud to do that well.

"One AAU team lost 153-37."

Giles looks for British title No. 2

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland (AP) — Vinny Giles, 33-yearold lawyer from Richmond, Va., will be trying to do what no American has managed for more than 40 years — win the British Amateur title two straight years.

Giles won the title last year by beating fellow-American Dick Siderowf, of Westport, Conn.; at the 21st hole in a marathon final at Hoylake, England.

This year, the championship is being decided over the famed old course at St. Andrews. Giles and Siderowf are both competing again, along with more than 50 other golfers from America.

America's Lawson Little won this coveted amateur crown twice running before World War II, in 1934 at Prestwick and 1935 at Lytham. That feat has been equaled only once since — by Martin Bonallack of England, who won in 1968, 1969 and 1970.

The British Amateur, first played in 1885, is decided on head-to-head match play. It starts Monday, and the 36-hole final is scheduled for next Saturday.

Americans, who won the title six times in the first 10 British amateurs after World War II, have not done so well in recent years. In the last decade the only American winners were Giles, Siderowf in 1963 and Steve Melnick in 1971.

The Amateur has not been played at St. Andrews since 1963, when Michael Lunt of Britain won the title. But Giles was a member of the U.S. team which beat Britain in the Walker Cup over the 6,917-yard, par-72 seaside links in 1975.

Giles, in the upper half of the draw, has to go out early Monday morning against H.A.N. Stott, a little known English golfer.

Valley cities show moderate gains in sales

Taxable sales in the nine valley cities showed moderate growth of 7.3 per cent during 1975, totaling $847,016,000, according to figures released today by the state Board of Equalization.

The local growth was slightly under the statewide average 7.9 per cent.

Total taxable sales in the valley were $947,016,000 compared to 1974 total of $788,660,000.

Despite the increase in taxable sales, 1975 was definitely a recession year locally and statewide as prices increased 10.5 per cent — meaning that sales by unit or volume were actually down 2.3 per cent in California.

Locally only two cities had growth larger than the increase in prices. In La Verne a sizeable increase of 33.7 per cent was registered, while in Upland the increase was 11.3 per cent.

In both cases, increases are apparently attributable to growth in the shopping districts along Foothill Boulevard.

Individual city totals are:

Pomona Up 6.9 per cent from $301,072,000 to $322,082,000 for a 38 per cent share of the total valley sales.

Ontario — Up 8.7 per cent from $150,845,000 to $164,057,000 for a 19.3 per cent share of valley sales.

Montclair — Up 3.8 per cent from $147,460,000 to $153,199,000 for an 18 per cent share of valley sales.

Upland—Up 11.3 per cent from $72,656,000 to $80,906,000 for a 9.5 per cent share of valley sales.

Chino — Up 1.8 per cent from $48,560,000 to $49,452,000 for a 5.8 per cent share of valley sales.

Claremont — Up 6.9 per cent from $29,261,000 to $31,291,000 for a 3.6 per cent share of valley sales.

La Verne — Up 33.7 per cent from $16,426,000 to $21,963,000 for a 2.5 per cent share of valley sales.

San Dimas — Up 7.6 per cent from $18,820,000 to $20,268,000 for a 2.3 per cent share of valley sales.

Walnut — Up 6.6 per cent from $3,560,000 to $3,798,000 for a 0.4 per cent share of valley sales.

Regionally, the entire southern section of the state lagged behind the statewide average, with growth in Southern California up 7.6 per cent. The only region of the state to fare worse was the San Francisco Bay Area where growth of only 6.6 per cent was recorded.

Business briefs

BOSTON (AP) — The Harvard Business School Association of Boston has presented its 1976 business statesman award to Bernard J. O'Deefe, chairman and president of EG&G, Inc., a Wellesley science and technology firm.

An association spokesman said the award went to O'Keefe for his leadership in seeking ways to solve the problems of energy resources in New England.

Quake activity this year nothing too unusual

WASHINGTON (AP) — Almost 23,000 persons have perished in 18 big earthquakes around the world this year, but scientists say the number of earthquakes is not unusual.

Only five of the 18 have been classified as "major" earthquakes, according to Waverly Persons, a geophysicist with the U.S. Geological Survey's National Earthquake Information Service in Golden, Colo.

"Everyone is trying to say there is unusual earthquake activity, but there is not," he said. "We've had normal activity for the first half of the year. Actually, if you look at the average predicted earthquakes for a year, we are slightly behind.

Normally there are 16 to 18 major earthquakes expected each year, said Persons, although for the past three years there have been only about a dozen annually.

Scientists say earthquake activity tends to episodic, with realtively quiet periods such as the past three years alternating with periods of more frequent disturbances.

Persons said this year's big earthquakes have attracted more attention because several have occurred in populated rather than remote areas.

The May 6 quake in northeastern Italy killed hundreds, and a May 16 shock in Soviet central Asia took an undetermined number of lives. A Feb. 4, earthquake in Guatemala killed 22,000 persons and injured another 76,000.

For every earthquake that destroys life or limb, there are hundreds that pass almost unnoticed.

Persons said approximately 6,000 quakes of various magnitudes register each year on seismographic equipment and "thousands more go unlocated because they are very small."

The five "major" earthquakes this year measured 7 or more on the Richter scale. Thirteen others were "signifiant," which indicates they measured 6.5 or stronger, or caused extensive damage and death.

On the Richter scale, every increase of 1 means the ground motion is at least 10 times greater. In populated areas, an earthquake of 3.5 can cause slight local damage, 4 can cause moderate damge, 5 considerable damage and 6 can be severe. A 7 is capable of heavy damage and an 8 is a "great" earthqnake capable of tremendous, widespread destruction.

The Italian quake measured 6.5 and the Soviet shock 7.2 on Richter. The Guatemala earthquake measured 7.5.

Quakes Sunday in west central Peru, west of Lima, and on or near the sparsely populated island of New Britain in the South Pacific registered 6.2 and 6.7 respectively.

The 1906 San Francisco earthquake registered 8.3 on the Richter scale.

Fashion boom in ostrich feathers

OUDISHOORN, South Africa (AP) — The farmers here know the ostrich can't fly or sing, has a tiny brain and is deemed among the stupidest of animals.

But they don't care.

Because new fashions have boosted a sagging market in ostrich feathers — and that's good.

Actress Elizabeth Taylor put in an order for a full length ostrich cape when she passed through South Africa late last year.

Orders from Europe and the United States are on the upswing as the nostalgia look brings back the "boa," plumed hats and other ostrich finery.

And traditional customers — cabarets, ice shows, the military circuses and carnivals — remain faithful to Africa's strangest bird.

Many of the 150 to 200 ostrich farmers here are quick to point out that feathers just cover everything else this bird can provide.

You can make 18 to 24 omelettes from one ostrich egg. On top of that, say Oudishorn's happy farmers, you can use the toes for ornaments, bones for bone meal, skins for handbags and wallets and innards for fertilizer.

There are some 90,000 ostriches decorating the roadsides throughout the Ouditshoorn area in south eastern South Africa.

It is estimated that approximately 99 per cent of the world's domestic ostriches are farmed here mainly for feather production, of which 60 per cent is exported.

The remainder, mostly "armpit feathers," are used to make dusters for sale in South Africa.

One ostrich, at the prevailing prices, produces about $80 worth of feathers every nine months and will produce feathers for 20 years.

Farmers can now earn about $144 in American currency per kilogram (2.2 pounds) for male feathers and $135 per kilogram for female feathers.

Ostriches have been farmed in Outdshoorn since 1850 when the vast flocks of wild ostriches roaming the African plains were first domesticated.

Oudtshoorn is a small town built on feathers in a sundrenched, semi-desert region called the Little Karoo.

Ostrich farms here draw more than 100,000 visitors a year.

Tourists can also visit the socalled "feather palaces" built in the boom years of the feather industry which came to an end in 1914.

These Victorian mansions were built when a million ostriches produced "feather millionaires" and considerable wealth for South Africa.

The fashion crazes of that era put the price of a pound of feather at more than $200.

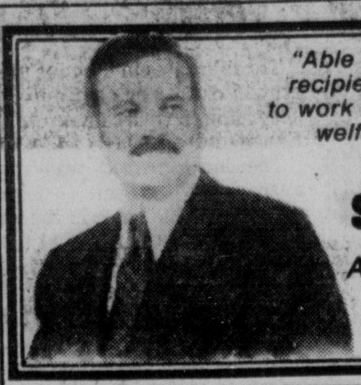
Ancient Roman naturalist Pliny, the Elder, following what he claimed was an exhaustive study, wrote of ostriches:

"The veriest fool they be of all others, for as high as the rest of their body is, yet if they thrust their head and neck once into any shrub or bush and get it hidden they think then they are safe enough and that no man see them."

The ostrich actually does lower his head to the ground to prevent detection which is perhaps the origin of the myth that ostriches bury their heads in sand.

But they may not be so dumb.

During a recent hail storm the ostriches were found "hiding" with their long, bare necks safely tucked away under their bodies where they couldn't be hurt.



"Able bodied Welfare recipients, who refuse to work should be denied welfare benefits."

'Quake' info not reaching buyers

By JERRY CURRY
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Unwary home buyers are moving into earthquake zones, even though state law requires real estate agents to advise them of the fact, a geologist specializing in earthquakes says.

"All of the information I have received indicates that nobody is doing it," said James E. Slosson, professor of geology at Los Angeles Valley College and a member of the state Seismic Safety Commission. He also served a term as geologist for the State of California.

"The first indication that I had was when the planning director of Imperial County told me in November that he doubted if anyone was informing the buyers," Slosson continued. "I've asked elsewhere. I have yet to encounter anyone who says: 'Yes, we're being informed.' "

Robert G. Adamson, executive vice president of the 6,600-member San Fernando Valley Board of Realtors, agrees with Slosson's statements. Adamson said the reason for noncompliance was mass confusion about the law and what it means.

Obviously, it is to the advantage of the real estate agent to comply because "the Department of Real Estate could take your license if you fail to disclose . . . the law says that you must disclose," Adamson asserted.

Real estate agents say they have had problems acquiring the state maps that record the state's seismic zones.

Confusion erupted among the land-dealers when an amendment was approved earlier this year providing that a geological survey — in some cases — was no longer required, although disclosure of the fault zone was still required.

The amendment removed the stipulation for a geological survey, for example, if someone was purchasing a single-family structure.

"Before that," Adamson said, "the law said that there must be disclosure" and that any building permit or property sale would have to be accompanied by a geological study.

In addition, Adamson said, it is probable that no real estate agent has the technical expertise necessary to read the state's seismic maps.

Those state maps are available-50 cents each from the City of Los Angeles Bureau of Engineering. Joseph W. Cobarrubias, engineering geologist for the city of Los Angeles, said that real estate agents had been asking for them. At least some of the real estate agents apparently are trying to comply.

"I've had a gentleman call," said Cobarrubias. "He said the broker had called him and said that they should have informed him that he was in a fault study zone (an area 660 feet each side of a fault, according to the law). The broker said the man could get out of the sales contract if he wished. We looked at the maps and he wasn't in the zone."

That statement by Cobarrubias supported Adamson's contention that the state maps could not be used by laymen to identify an individual lot or section of property as part of the seismic study zone. Cobarrubias and his staff are now transferring the state information to "very, very detailed district maps that show the lots and tracts."

Those more detailed maps are specifically for the use of Cobarrubias but they could be used by the real estate agents when they are finished, Adamson said.

Adamson and Slosson also agree that the seismic study zone disclosure is a protection for the consumer.

"The public is entitled to a complete disclosure of the facts," Adamson said. "I don't think that a geological study should be forced on the public."

"Home buyers are entitled to know if they are in a study area," said Slosson. "Psychologically, they should know and make up their own minds after gaining the knowledge."

He also said a geological survey wasn't a bad idea. Slosson said the cost might be as little as $50.

Room to relax at project

The longing to live at a slower pace in a friendly, small town atmosphere has made popular the Lewis Homes residential development in Claremont, said Richard Lewis, president.

The homes offer up to 2,194 square feet of floor space. Those houses in the equestrian section are built on one-fourth to one-half acre lots and are zoned for horses.

Homes in the adjoining sector are constructed on lots of 13,000 square feet area and larger.

Both sections exhibit similar architectural stylings in floor plans and include both one and two story designs. Buyers have their choice of homes with three and four bedrooms and up to 2½ bathrooms. The homes have family rooms, dining rooms and kitchens.

The homes are priced from $56,000 with VA, FHA and conventional financing available.

Prospective buyers may reach the development by driving on the San Bernardino Freeway to Indian Hill Boulevard in Claremont, drive north to Base Line Road and then go east to the homes.

A sales office is open daily until dusk. For more information, persons may phone 626-7589.

Condominiums offer freedom from chores

Condominium ownership is expected to remain Southern California's most popular life-style during the last half of the 1970s.

So reports Ira Gribin, president of the California Association of Realtors.

"I believe condominium living is here to stay," he said. "It's not necessarily the status symbol sought only by the more affluent as many people think."

What do condominium owners seek?" he asked. "Generally they look for privacy and dignity. Condominium type of living allows them to express their individual personalities while at the same time preserving personal identities."

Gribin added that even though condominium owners enjoy their privacy they still like having friends and acquaintances close by, afforded by the amenities condominium living offers.

In addition he said, people purchasing condominiums seek these three things:

—Environmental comfort which is important in their lives.

—Advantages of equity investments in homeownership.

—Freedom from burdensome maintenance chores that compete and interfere with their weekend freedom.

"Condominium owners are no different than the average home dweller," said Gribin. "They're both young and old. Married and single. Divorced and widowed."

Lenders aided with new kits

The American Bankers Association is offering Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA) kits to enable financial institutions to comply with the anticipated June 30 RESPA deadline.

Designed by the association's housing and real estate finance division, the kit includes a copy of the new consumer booklet on settlement costs, revised two-page statement forms and a copy of the revised "Act and Regulation X."

The kit is offered to help banks comply with the revised act and is the first offered to banks and other mortgage lenders, said officials.

On June 1, the U. S. Department of Housing and Urban Development is expected to issue its final regulations on RESPA. Mortgage lenders will then have 30 days to comply with changes in the requirements.

Beginning June 30, all lenders must provide prospective borrowers with estimates of local settlement charges when the written mortgage loan application is filed.

Banks, savings and loan associations and others must also distribute the new consumer settlement information booklet at the time of the written application and — if conducting settlement — lenders must provide the borrower with the Uniform Settlement Statement not later than at settlement and have it available for inspection the day before upon request of the borrower.

Roger B. Hawkins, director of the ABA's housing division, said that a "team effort by banks and the ABA had made the big difference in having changes and amendments made to RESPA.

"Now," Hawkins continued, "we have launched a crash printing and fulfill-ment program to provide the RESPA compliance items that banks, and others, will need by the June 30 deadline."

RESPA initially went into effect June 30, 1975, but complaints by consumers, Realtors and mortgage lenders resulted in an overhaul of RESPA by HUD following hearings last Fall.

The nation's nearly 14,000 banks purchased more than 123 tons of RESPA materials last year from the ABA to facilitate compliance with the original regulations. REPA covers all types of mortgage transactions for one to four-family dwellings.

Center permit issued

The Chaffey College board of trustees has awarded a $230,392 contract for construction of a child care center.

Selected was the Earle Casler Construction Co. of Upland. Completion of the new college building is expected next November.

Capital outlay for the project will be funded by a permissive tax override of less than two cents per $100 assessed valuation spread over two fiscal years.

Appealing

A Filipino experimenter found that humans who ate bananas appealed to mosquitoes. The insects apparently crave two chemicals found in the fruit as well as in blood, and are equipped with sensitive detectors that enable them to sniff out faint banana odors in sweat.

Three earn GRI awards

Three Realtor/associate members of the Pomona Valley Board of Realtors have completed their requirements for the Graduate, Realtors Institute educational certificate.

They are Thelma Geller and Susan O'Conner, Wheeler Steffen Garrison, Ltd., and Carol Leif of Herbert Hawkins Co.

Mark Warren, board president, presented them certificates at a recent luncheon program.

Each of the three recipients had to earn 15 units of specialized real estate educational courses offered by the California Association of Realtors on such subjects as sales, investment, administration, appraisal, law and management.

They had to also complete at least three years as members of the local board of Realtors. The three are among 23,000 persons in the real estate profession who have earned the GRI designation.

New county proposed

OCEANSIDE (AP) — A new county from Escondido to San Clemente is proposed by Bill Bradley, city manager of San Marcos.

The area makes up 20 per cent or more of San Diego County's population and is ill served by the government based in the city of San Diego, said Bradley.

"I intend to pursue the feasibility of the formation of the state's 59th county," he said after a recent meeting of mayors and city managers.

Commented Mayor Paul Graham of Oceanside: "Collectively, we can wield significant power."

ATTENTION!

ALL FICTITIOUS BUSINESS NAME STATEMENTS FILED IN 1971 MUST BE REFILED IN 1976

AND ALSO

those with changes must be republished at the time of refiling

HERE IS THE LAW —
(Business and Professions Code)

Sec. 17917
(c) Where a new statement is required because the prior statement has expired under subdivision (a) of Section 17920, the new statement need not be published unless there has been a change in the information required in the expired statement.

Sec. 17920
(a) Unless the statement expires earlier under subdivision (b) or (c), a fictitious business name statement expires at the end of five years from December 31 of the year in which it was filed in the office of the county clerk.

Sec. 17917
(b) Subject to the requirements of subdivision (a), the newspaper selected for the publication of the statement should be one that circulates in the area where the business is to be conducted.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ON THE FIVE-YEAR FICTITIOUS NAME LAW

1. QUESTION: When do new requirements in the Fictitious Name Law go into effect?
ANSWER: Beginning January 1, 1976, all statements filed during 1971 must be refiled with the County Clerk.

2. QUESTION: Who must file the required new statement of doing business under a fictitious name?
ANSWER: All individuals, partnerships, trusts, corporations and associations which operate under names not their own must refile.

3. QUESTION: Is there a statutory fee for refiling?
ANSWER: Yes, by law the County Clerk must charge $10.00.

4. QUESTION: Will 1971 registrants receive notification from the County Clerk as to the statutory requirement that they must refile in 1976?
ANSWER: Yes, the law requires the County Clerk to give such notice at least two months before the end of the year 1976. In Los Angeles County, where 75,000 statements were filed and published in 1971, notifications by post card will begin to go to registrants in January, 1976, when all those who registered in January, February, or March, 1971, will receive notice with the offer of forms for refiling. In April, similarly, those who filed in April, May, or June 1971, will be notified and in July those who filed in July, August, or September 1971, and in October those who filed in October, November and December, 1971.

5. QUESTION: Must statements when refiled be republished?
ANSWER: Yes, if there has been any change in the statement as originally filed in 1971.

6. QUESTION: What is a Fictitious Firm Name?
ANSWER: One that does not include the surname of the operator, or one that implies the ownership participation of others such as "Brothers", "Sons", "Associates", "Company"; or if a corporation owner, a name different from that registered in the Articles of Incorporation.

7. QUESTION: What is the purpose of the fictitious name procedure?
ANSWER: The requirements have been in effect in California since 1872 and are designed to protect the consumer by enabling him to identify the person or persons with whom he is really dealing.

8. QUESTION: Must all firms presently doing business under fictitious names file new statements?
ANSWER: Yes, all must refile under new code sections of the Business and Professions Code, 17900-17930 and also Sections 7540 and 101595 and Section 10522.5 of the Business and Professions Code.

9. QUESTION: Is it true that a mere change in the residence address of an individual or general partner doing business under a registered fictitious name excuses the party at the five year refiling interval from meeting the publication provision which requires a new publication "if there has been a change of information in the expired statement"?
ANSWER: The wording, "change in the residence address" in Section 17920 of Business and Professions Code is confusing: It has reference only to the statutory expiration of any Fictitious Business Name Statement "40 days after any change in the facts." Changes in residence address are specifically exempted from the changes which invalidate a fictitious name filing. The requirements for publication with "any change in the information" is in Section 17917 of the Business and Professions Code. It is not related to the exemption in Section 17920. It has been held that change in any residential address, as well as business address, is a "change in information" and will therefore require republication upon renewal at the end of any five year renewal period.

10. QUESTION: Must statements filed in 1972 be refiled in 1977, those filed in 1973 in 1978, and so on?
ANSWER: Yes, statements must be refiled every five years.

11. QUESTION: What is the penalty for failure to file and publish?
ANSWER: One penalty will be inability to entertain a court action until the law has been complied with. In addition, most banks demand evidence of filing and publication prior to opening an account under a fictitious name.

12. QUESTION: On a first filing must there be a newspaper publication?
ANSWER: Yes, the refiling law does not excuse first filers from meeting the statutory publishing requirements.

13. QUESTION: Where are the printed forms to be obtained for this filing and publication procedure?
ANSWER: Free forms and service are available at this newspaper office or at any office of the County Clerk or from the California Newspaper Service Bureau at 210 South Spring Street, Los Angeles.

14. QUESTION: What is the cost of filing and publication?
ANSWER: Statutory filing fee for the Fictitious Name Statement, either new or refiled, inclusive of mandatory certification of a copy by the County Clerk, is $10.00. Publication charge for the four insertions of the notice is determined by the newspaper.

15. QUESTION: Can two fictitious name businesses operating under different names of the same address and owned by the same person or persons be filed and published under a single statement?
ANSWER: Yes, more than one business name can be listed on the single statement provided all have the same address of business. Each separate business is to be indicated.

16. QUESTION: After January 1, 1976, will all new filings require publication?
ANSWER: All new filings will require publication.

17. QUESTION: Precisely what is the process for publishing?
ANSWER: Publication must be made once a week for four weeks in a qualified newspaper circulating in the area of the affected business. Publication must be commenced within 30 days after filing. And proof of publication must be filed with the County Clerk within 30 days after completion of publication.

18. QUESTION: What other values do registrants gain through publication of Fictitious Firm Name?
ANSWER: Evidential proof of priority is established in the event competitors later use or file under the same name. Also, there is direct advertising value for the firm through multiple insertions of name and address of the business, it being noted that newspaper frequently print such names in black face type in capital letters, separately spaced.

A Message To CLASSIFIED AD USERS

You are about to invest money for an Ad and you are entitled to get results. To accomplish this, it is necessary for you TO TELL ALL about the details of your offer. Be sure you don't make any of the following errors that prevent results.

Readers can't guess on important details. Remember, a well written informative ad will get results faster and cost less in the long run.

1. Don't Omit The Address

Many out-of-town readers will write you but will not spend money for a long distance call.

2. Don't Omit The Phone Number

Many readers will call you but do not find it convenient to come to your home.

3. Don't Use Blind Box Numbers

They are difficult to answer and many people are suspicious of them.

4. Don't Conceal The Price

Surveys show that a high percentage of readers will not answer an ad unless the price is given.

5. Don't leave Home On The Days You Advertise

Many good prospects will not call the second time if your phone is unanswered.

Polly's Pointers

DEAR POLLY — When using dry soup mixes, I find that if the envelope is torn or cut straight across the dotted line the empty envelope holds exactly one cup of water. This eliminates the need to use a measuring cup. — VIRGINIA.

© 1976 by NEA, Inc.

DEAR POLLY — I decorate gelatin salads with cream cheese by pressing the cheese through a tea strainer. This achieves a lacy effect, and for less money than buying prepared whipped toppings. —MRS. J.F.

Polly pays $1.00 for every idea used. Send them to her, % this newspaper.

DEAR POLLY — If the talon breaks off a zipper, remove the plastic from a wire twist such as used to close a bread wrapper. Run the wire through the two holes where the talon came off and twist the ends together to form a loop. —VERA.

DEAR POLLY — When making buttonholes by hand use two strands of embroidery thread. The buttonholes will not only last longer but look more attractive. —DOROTHY.

DEAR POLLY — A pronged plastic ash tray makes a good bowl to use for soaking the nails when giving yourself a manicure. —MICHELLE.

DEAR POLLY — It pays to clip every coupon you see. Those you do not plan to use can be swapped with friends. This can easily double or triple the savings made by using coupons. — C.J.A.

DEAR POLLY — When I get tired of a certain hair shampoo and want to try another but do not want to waste what I have on hand, I use it to wash hand-washables. A little goes a long way, it smells nice and no money is wasted. — T.C.G.

DEAR POLLY — When washing the bowls and pans after mixing dough, always wash with cold water and then scald with hot water. If hot water is used first it sets the flour and makes the spots doughy and harder to get off. —LAURA.

DEAR POLLY — If there's no one to water the house plants while you're on a trip, take a wash tub, lay common building bricks two layers deep over the entire pan bottom. Fill with water to the top of the top layer, set flowers in earthen pots on top of the bricks. Capiliary attraction will take care of watering them. —MRS.T.H.

The spirit of '76

Julie McWhirter, a regular on NBC's The Rich Little Show, says that the Midwest is her biggest source of comedy material. "Each time I go home to Indiana, I find a new character," she says.

At an early age, Julie was doing impressions of her teachers and friends. After graduation from DePauw University, she traveled to the West Coast where she put her characters and voices to good use—doing commercials and voice-overs for cartoons.

It was during the filming of a commercial that she was brought to the attention of comedian Jonathan Winters, who was so impressed with her talents that he invited her to make a guest appearance on his NBC special, "Jonathan Winters Presents 200 Years of American Humor."

Julie spends many hours perfecting her craft. She is currently involved in a comedy workshop and she is taking dancing lessons.

Elaine Joyce, who has portrayed roles ranging from light comedy to heavy prostitution, is now assisting private eye Jake Axminster (Wayne Rogers) and operating a hot line switchboard in NBC's City of Angels.

As switchboard operator Marsha, Ms. Joyce concedes she's no angel. She sports a 30s hairstyle and trades quips with Wayne who used to play "Trapper John" in M.A.S.H. in the action series set in the 1930s when Los Angeles was anything but a city of angels. Elaine's last series on NBC was as Don Knotts' sympathetic girl friend on his comedy-variety series in 1970. Before that, she appeared in Here Come the Brides, The Jonathan Winters Show, Red Skelton Show and Carol Burnett Show (as the dippy divorcee next door).

Half-rebel, half-mischievous, Elaine's sense of humor combined with her background as a model and dancer (American School of Ballet and New York City Ballet) to propel her acting career.

Barbara Stanger, who is featured as Mary Anderson on the NBC daytime serial Days of Our Lives, is the daughter of a U.S. diplomat and was born in Paris. She has lived and attended school in Rabat, Morocco; Burundi, Africa; Berne, Switzerland; Munich, Germany and Martinique in the West Indies—also New York City. There she attended the American Academy of Dramatic Arts with Randy Mantooth (of Emergency!) and TV actress Kate Jackson.

Landing an agent even before she was graduated, Barbara won a small role in the daytime serial Love of Life, the first of her four New York soap opera credits. Others were the role of Barbara Ryan in As the World Turns, a brief run in A World Apart and a starring role, as Laura Elliott, in Love Is A Many-Splendored Thing.

When the last-named series folded, she drove to California, won guest roles in Barnaby Jones and Streets of San Francisco and starred in the syndicated production of "A Christmas Child."

SILENCE IS GOLDEN

Usually, when a husband and wife refuse to converse, a marriage is on the rocks. But to Shields and Yarnell, the mime artists on NBC's The Mac Davis Show, Thursdays at 8PM, silence is a way of life.

Their marriage began in silence in 1972. Robert Shields and Lorene Yarnell were joined in silent matrimony in a mime wedding witnessed by 5,000 friends and passersby in San Francisco's Union Square. They wore white make-up and black and white drum major uniforms and one newspaper columnist said they looked like "an organ grinder's monkeys."

During the ceremony, both pretended to take their pulsating hearts out of their chests and exchanged them while onlookers sighed. Then, Robert assumed a fencer's stance and placed a gold band on Lorene's extended hand. Lorene's brother, Bruce Yarnell (a baritone with the San Francisco Opera who was killed in a plane crash in 1973) offered a love song in mime, which made it difficult to know what song he had in mind. Their lips silently motioned "I do," Rev. Scott Beach, attired in medieval costume, pronounced them man and wife, and they were driven away in a vintage Rolls Royce.

Thus began their real-life marriage but their marriage to mime had begun earlier. Robert began learning mime as a child. He didn't start to speak until he was 5.

First, he practiced in front of a mirror and later, he went to France to study with Marcel Marceau. "Marcel and I are good friends," said Robert, "but I only stayed under his tutelage for two months. I didn't feel his technique was right for me. He is more highbrow and my mime is more commercial."

For many months, Robert did his mime act at Union Square in San Francisco weekdays and Saturdays and became a regular tourist attraction. During his appearances there, he picked up about $30 a day in tossed coins, a bloody nose and several other injuries from people who did or did not appreciate his mimicry.

Then he met Lorene, Peter Gennaro's lead dancer, when they both appeared in a TV special, "Fol De Rol." He taught her mime and she taught him dancing. They became an act. "It was hard at first," said Lorene. "Everyone knew Robert but they didn't know me. We'd be hired for parties and people would brush me aside." To perfect her act, Lorene performed solo on weekends in Ghiradelli Square and became, like Robert, a regular feature there. Soon she felt more secure and, as she says, "really like his partner."

Now, they work together. They spend 24 hours a day together, with many of those hours devoted to body movements, yoga, mime, dance, and training themselves not to blink. Robert can go four hours without blinking; Lorene, three. Sometimes they don't speak for two or three days. "Talking," said Robert, "is not our way of communicating. We converse in mime. Then something happens that's funny and we can't resist laughing—loudly."

COVER CLOSE-UP

ONE-MAN COMEDY CONGLOMERATE

Loretta Swit, Rob Reiner, Sandy Duncan and Paul Williams (clockwise) are a few of the weekly guest stars granted a wish by celestial messenger, Carl Reiner, in the comedy anthology series Good Heavens.

Carl Reiner, stars as celestial messenger Mr. Angel, who fulfills favorite dreams in the ABC comedy series Good Heavens.

He has achieved recognition as actor, comedian, writer, director, producer, novelist, TV moderator, recording star and winner of 11 Emmy Awards (four for performing, four for writing and three for producing).

Typically, in addition to performing in the only continuing role in Good Heavens, airing Saturdays at 8PM, Reiner is series executive producer and is also involved in the writing and directing.

"I'm fairly confident that I'm the first executive producer-angel hyphenate in the business," he observed with humor.

Dressed as a businessman, Mr. Angel appears before ordinary mortals from every walk of life who have performed simple acts of kindness. To them he offers, as a magnificent reward, a chance to fulfill a favorite wish provided it is something money can't buy.

"Mr. Angel wears a luxurious brown velvet suit with vest and a hat so he always looks slightly out of place when he shows up at places like an arcade, auto shop or baseball game to grant dreams," Reiner observed.

Describing the series as "a sweet show about good people who are recognizable to the audience," he continued, "Mr. Angel freezes action or stops action of others present when he approaches the individual singled out for a good deed. He also informs the recipient that he or she will forget everything that has transpired between the two of them. This does happen at the end of each episode."

Reiner, whose long television career has been highlighted by his early years of writing for and performing live with Sid Caesar and Imogene Coca on Your Show of Shows and the later Dick Van Dyke series which he created, turned to discussing Good Heavens, from a writer's perspective.

"It is the most difficult kind of assignment because it is an anthology with one continuing character, so it is impossible to just hand out writing assignments on it," commented Reiner, who shares final re-write chores with producers Austin and Irma Kalish.

Soft-spoken and thoughtful, the series star believes that people's fantasies are important and should be considered seriously. "Mine, when I was young was to become a baseball player," he said.

And if Carl Reiner could have one fantasy or wish granted today, what might it be?

"At this point it would be for the ability to say 'no' more often. I have a tendency to say 'yes' when projects are intriguing.

SPECIAL TALENT CAN CHANGE YOUR LIFE

Michael Landon, star of NBC's Little House on the Prairie, Wednesdays at 8PM, urges parents to keep an eye out for their children's special talents, because, he says, "once discovered, a talent can open a new life.

"I was a scared, self-conscious little squirt until I discovered a talent I hadn't even dreamed of," says Landon, recalling his high school days in New Jersey.

"I weighed barely a hundred pounds, and I couldn't do anything very well. My grades were okay, but I had a very poor image of myself." One day, during his junior year, a track coach urged young Landon to join in. During that afternoon he just happened to pick up a javelin and throw it further than anyone else in the school. "Suddenly I had found a talent. Suddenly I could do something better than the other guys. I felt great," he remembers.

That accidental discovery led him into daily practice, which helped him win a national championship in his senior year, and an athletic scholarship to the University of Southern California. A shoulder injury ended his sports career, but he still credits the javelin with opening other doors in his life.

"Being best at something changed my life. It gave me a better impression of myself, and it kept me going in other fields," says Landon. "Parents should watch for the 'special' talent which will give their child self-confidence."

'THIS COP OWES THE MAFIA'

"In a sense," claims actor Abe Vigoda, "I owe a debt to the Mafia. Without all the hoodlum roles, I would never have been able to afford two cars or my expensive apartment in Beverly Hills."

Vigoda, who currently plays Detective Fish on the hit ABC series, Barney Miller (Thursdays at 8:30PM), was referring, of course, to the fact that the "big break" in his career came after years of struggle when, at age fifty, he was chosen to play the all-important role of Tessio in "The Godfather." Like so many performers from that Academy Award-winning film, Abe found himself in demand once the movie went into release and, over the next couple of years played another 20-30 gangsters in a variety of television shows and motion pictures. ("The Godfather," incidentally, was his first picture.)

A product of New York's lower East Side, where his Polish immigrant father worked in the garment industry, Vigoda became hooked on acting when, in the first grade, he did a school play. Over the thirty years that he's been a professional actor, he estimates that he's appeared in more than one hundred plays. He has worked on and off-Broadway, in stock, in touring companies. He always did his job capably, but there was never even a close brush with fame and fortune . . . until he delivered that unforgettable line in the Francis Ford Coppola picture: "Tom, can you get me off the hook . . . For old times' sake?"

He got the part on Barney Miller as the result of a guest shot he did on the now defunct Sandy Duncan Show, and now receives more fan mail than anyone else on that program.

"I'm an actor," states Vigoda. "Whether I'm playing Fish or Tessio, I try to be the man inside. But I don't try to act because that never works. I try to work internally. What you feel inside comes out in the eyes. It's an organic feeling and without it you aren't much of an actor."

Abe Vigoda: a dedicated actor who is living proof that, in show business, it is never too late to achieve major stardom.

"TELE-TALK"

Martine Bartlett has been signed to co-star in "Sybil," a four-hour NBC World Premiere movie based on the best-seller. She will portray Olga, the disturbed mother of Sybil, whose bizarre and often cruel treatment of the girl caused her to develop 16 personalities.

Joanne Woodward was signed earlier to portray Dr. Cornelia Wilbur, the psychiatrist who treated Sybil. The role of Sybil will be cast soon.

Bartlett has appeared in numerous productions, including "The Sweet Bird of Youth," in which she co-starred with Paul Newman. She also has made frequent television appearances and won an Emmy nomination as best supporting actress for an episode of "Arrest And Trial." Her film credits include "The Prize" with Paul Newman and "Kansas City Bomber," in which she played Raquel Welch's mother.

Natalie Wood, Robert Wagner and Laurence Olivier will star in a new, two-hour TV adaptation of Tennessee Williams' Pulitzer Prize-winning play, "Cat On a Hot Tin Roof," which will air on NBC in the 1976-77 season.

Wood will portray Margaret (Maggie the Cat), Wagner will be her husband, Brick, and Olivier will play Big Daddy. Wood and Wagner, who are married in real life, will be appearing together for the first time in a taped drama special for NBC. Their only other joint TV appearance was in a made-for-TV movie, "The Affair," in 1973.

Wood's motion picture credits include "West Side Story," "Splendor In the Grass," "The Great Race," "Gypsy" and "Bob & Carol & Ted & Alice." Wagner, co-star of the current television series Switch, was the star of the series, It Takes a Thief. Among his films are "The Pink Panther," "Winning," "The Longest Day," "The Condemned of Altona," 'The War Lover" and "Titanic."

Olivier, one of the most distinguished and acclaimed actors in the world, has received many honors, including the Academy Award in 1948 for his starring performance in "Hamlet." While noted for his portrayals of Shakespearean heroes, he also has starred in works by such contemporary writers as O'Neill and Osborne. He is a producer and director as well as actor and has performed on stage, in films and on television (both here and in England) during a career which spans more than a half-century.

Williams received a Pulitzer Prize for this play in 1955 (he was awarded another Pulitzer Prize in 1948 for "A Streetcar Named Desire"). He also was honored with the New York Drama Critics Circle Award for "Cat On a Hot Tin Roof."

The play, set on Big Daddy Pollitt's Mississippi Delta plantation, focuses on the conflicts of his family and reveals the character of its members — from greed and opportunism to unselfishness and devotion — when word gets out that he is near death. The crises of the Pollitt clan are complicated by Brick's alcoholism and the frustrations of his wife, Margaret, as she endures a loveless marriage.

Filming has started in Hollywood on "The Great Houdinis," a two-hour motion picture which will air during the 1976-77 season on ABC. Paul Michael Glaser of ABC's hit series, Starsky & Hutch, heads an all-star cast in the drama which will be filmed in Los Angeles and on location in San Diego, California. Also starring are Sally Struthers, Ruth Gordon, Vivian Vance, Adrienne Barbeau and Bill Bixby. "The Great Houdinis" dramatizes the inner turmoil of the world-renowned illusionist and escape artist.

"TOGETHERNESS" IN THE SPIRIT OF '76?

SONNY & CHER

With more singles deciding to stay that way than ever before, with more and more people deciding to live together informally rather than tie the nuptial knot, and with the divorce rate on the rise — the Sunday night saga of CBS' Sonny and Cher Show may become the model for millions who have come to believe that "friendship can be a stronger bond than marriage."

Nearly everyone is familiar with Sonny and Cher's story—the teenage princess of rock married to the singing partner whose business acumen built their careers to the height of international success . . . and then the split-up. "The only trouble with being apart," Cher explains now, "was that we both discovered it wasn't any fun to work alone. When you've worked with someone for a long time, you get to know how to act and react as naturally as breathing in and then out again. When we split, I found myself feeling like I was holding my breath all the time . . . like the other half of everything was missing."

Sonny agrees with Cher's analysis of their situation, saying, "At first, we didn't know exactly what would happen. It was hard to accept that the girl I married is now married to someone else, and is about to bear him a child. I think Cher must have had some mixed reactions to my romantic involvement with someone else. But all that is past. The bottom line is that we enjoy working together. Our private lives are not getting in each other's way anymore."

"Both of us may be just a bit more grown-up than we were six months or a year ago," adds Cher. "One thing that most people don't realize is that when you start a singing career at 16, you may seem to grow up fast, traveling all over the world, making records, films, being on television — but in a funny way, a schedule like that doesn't leave you enough time for the personal side of things, and in some ways you really don't mature. When Sonny and I broke up our marriage, it may have been a form of emotionally catching up to ourselves. Whatever it was, we're both happier now and having fun doing the show together."

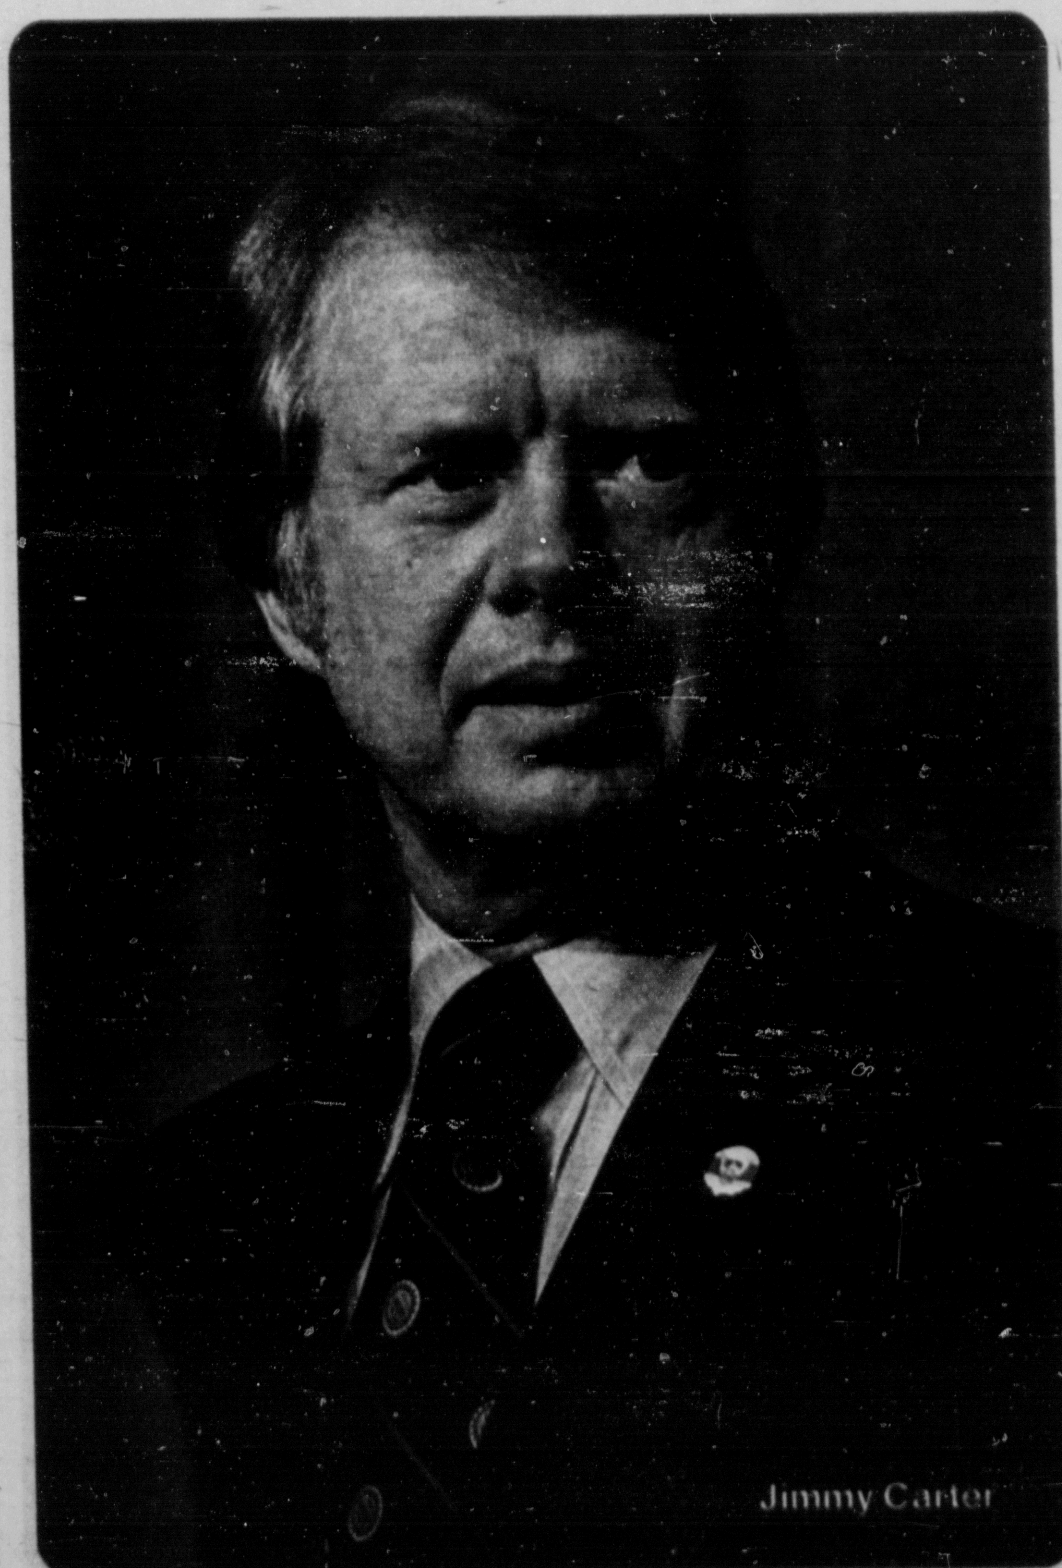
VIEWS ON THE ISSUES FROM CAMPAIGN '76

FAMILY WEEKLY Begins a Series of Opinions Worth Remembering, Win or Lose, From All the Men Who've Gone After the Presidency



Jimmy Carter

VIEWS FROM THE TOP:

It is one of the glories of democracy that the opinions of those who win and those who lose are almost bound to be reflected in our country's policies and progress. The liberal opponent pulls the conservative to the left, and the conservative pulls the liberal to the right. What eventually emerges, when the democratic processes have worked properly, is a winner who cannot have failed to take into account a broad spectrum of all the views expressed on the long, hard road to nomination and election. The vanquished, like the victors, leave a lasting legacy.

In this Bicentennial election year, Family Weekly feels it is important to present as many of these conflicting views as possible. We went to all the major candidates for nomination in both parties—and asked them about issues we feel our readers will consider important.

This week, we present the opinions of Jimmy Carter and Morris Udall.

Later: highlights of our exclusive interviews with the other candidates and ex-candidates.

After the conventions, we will present YOUR views, the opinions expressed by You the Reader in answers to our special Timely Issues Survey, which drew tens of thousands of replies now being tabulated and evaluated.

Ask Them Yourself

Want to ask a famous person a question? Send the question on a postcard, to "Ask," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022. We'll pay $5 for published questions. Sorry, we can't answer others.

FOR ELIZABETH L. POST,
author of "The New Emily Post's Etiquette"

Isn't it time we stopped saying "How do you do?" when we are introduced? It means nothing; no reply is expected. What would be a good substitute?—Mrs. Alfred C. Herz, New London, N.H.

● Not all, but most people, are basically shy and need a crutch to help them over their reluctance to talk to strangers. We use many phrases as crutches—"How are you?" "Glad to meet you," etc. "How do you do?" really means "How are you doing?" You're right. No answer is required. But these automatic responses make it easier to break the ice than thinking up apt remarks for each new situation. Without "How do you do?" many conversations would never get off the ground at all.

FOR NANCY WALKER, star of "Rhoda"

Does it bother you to be referred to as "plain?"—W.M., Owensboro, Ky.

● No. My husband thinks I'm gorgeous, and that's all that counts. I couldn't care less what other people think. However, had I been prettier, I'm sure my career would probably have taken a different turn. Glamorous women are seldom funny.

FOR GEORGE SEGAL, star of "Dick and Jane"

Weren't you one of those who worked his way through college?—E.B., Decatur, Ill.

● Yes, and believe me, it wasn't as glamorous as it's cracked up to be. One of the things I liked doing, though, was managing a fresh fruit stand right in my neighborhood—Broadway and 116th Street. I'm a fruit lover, and what I didn't sell I ate.

FOR RALPH HOUK, manager of the Detroit Tigers

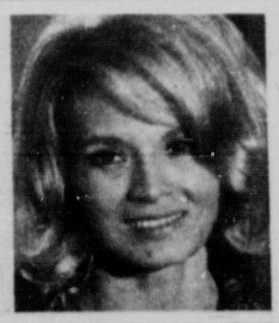
What do you tell a pitcher when you walk out to the mound?—J. Morris, Lansing, Mich.

● Well, I might point out a flaw in his delivery or warn him about some batter who's new in the league. But if the other team is hitting his stuff, I'll just talk long enough to give the new man time to warm up. I usually wave the other pitcher in before I get to the mound so the first guy won't have time to get mad. Pitchers aren't too happy about being taken out, and they'll say, "Geez, I'm all right. I can get the next one out." And sometimes they'll go to throwing things.

FOR RAQUEL WELCH

What's the first thing you read in a newspaper?—J.C., Hollywood, Calif.

● I read it from back to front; scan the movie reviews, then the sections that deal with people. I flip through for stories that catch my eye. What it boils down to is that when I read, I like to start off being entertained. I get ready for the heavy and depressing stuff to follow.



FOR ANGIE DICKINSON

I heard that you have insurance on your legs. True?—Laurie Stechman, San Luis Obispo, Calif.

● It used to be true—but no more. The premiums are too high.

FOR LESLIE UGGAMS

Who are the most interesting people you've met?—J.R., Lansing, Mich.

● Without a doubt—politicians. JFK fascinated me because of his amazing gift for remembering names—even after a period of years. And I'll never forget the time Bobby Kennedy called my house (about my singing at a Democratic dinner) and my housekeeper passed out in a dead faint. Or the day I visited the White House while LBJ was President. He kept turning out the lights and complaining that he was the only one who worried about wasted electricity.

FOR GEORGE MEANY, president of the AFL-CIO

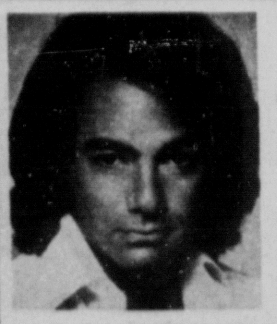
What's the difference between business donations to politicians, which are illegal, and organized labor donations, which are legal?—Ken Stevenson, Holidaysburg, Pa.

● Organized labor's contributions are made from a pool of voluntary contributions from millions of union members. These individuals are the real contributors. It is illegal for a labor union to contribute dues money to a candidate for Federal office.



FOR NEIL DIAMOND

You said in a recent interview that you hated songwriting. If that's so, why do you do it?—Laurie Rudd, Grand Junction, Colo.

● I wasn't using hate in the usual sense of the word. I was being analytical. Like a love-hate relationship, I sometimes hate the anxiety that writing produces, but I love the results. The work may be torture, but the outcome is exalting.

FOR THE "ASK THEM YOURSELF" EDITOR

Why don't the stars who originate roles on the stage re-create them when the movie versions are made?—S. Chavez, Whittier, Calif.

● The real reason is that Hollywood feels Broadway stars aren't sufficiently known to carry a multimillion-dollar production. Some movie producers also say they want to give the public someone else in the lead roles. Actress Celeste Holm calls the practice "sheer idiocy." Years ago, she was offered the "Born Yesterday" film role, and couldn't imagine why. She pointed out that if she took it, she could only imitate Judy Holliday. The producer finally gave in. Josephine Premice, now on Broadway in "Bubbling Brown Sugar," says Streisand in "Hello Dolly" was the "most interesting example of not using the right person." And she adds: "Audrey Hepburn in 'My Fair Lady' is another classic of miscasting."

Memorable Opinions of the Men Who Have Sought the Presidency

Elizabeth Gee

"I think if everybody in the U.N. felt, 'When we pass a resolution, it will have some effect,' the U.N. would become much more responsible about its decisions."—Jimmy Carter

Jimmy Carter
Democrat

Jimmy Carter seems indefatigable. He arrived in our New York offices smiling but serious, with an entourage of Secret Servicemen and campaign assistants who were, by contrast, out of breath and dragging their feet.

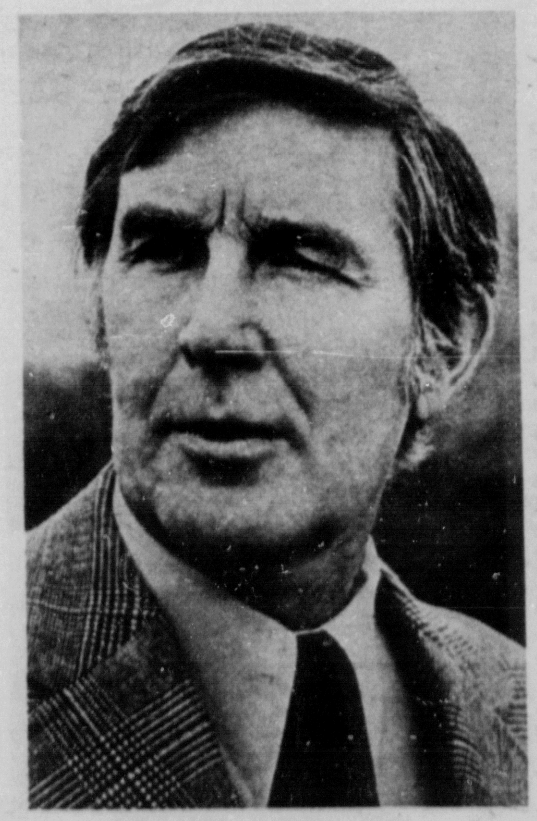
Carter is known as a man most people have difficulty keeping up with. The former governor of Georgia has about him an air of supreme confidence. Many of his critics claim he is "fuzzy" on the issues, but he answered all our questions in specific detail, talking expansively, perhaps even glibly.

There is about Jimmy Carter an unstinting belief in his own abilities. He even prefaced some of his remarks with, "When I'm elected President..."

On Federal Bureaucracy: Every time a new problem evolves, Congress creates a new agency. In 1974, the Congress and the President created 84 new agencies. Each one may be needed at the time it's created, but after a period of five or six years, when the need has passed, it's still there. We now have about 1,900 that we know about—there are probably 600 to 800 more that we don't know about. There is an evolutionary and almost inevitable procedure as far as Government agencies are concerned: the first thing that happens is that the agency enshrouds itself in secrecy; next, it tries to conceal the fact that it even exists so that it won't be scrutinized by the public or the General Accounting Office. Another thing it does is to start to make work for itself. I don't want anybody to vote for me this year unless that voter wants to see the entire executive branch of our Government completely reorganized and made efficient, economical, simple, purposeful and manageable for a change.

On Investigative Agencies: We've got to have a good intelligence network. We can't afford to predicate foreign-policy decisions on public-relations handouts from Communist dictators. But I see no reason why the CIA should plot murders or assassinations against a nation that's at peace with us. I don't see any reason why the CIA should ever violate the law in any respect to investigate the private affairs of the American people. The only thing I can assure you is that, when I'm President, if the CIA or the FBI or other secret organizations should ever make a mistake, I'll call a press conference and I'll tell the American people what happened and be personally responsible that there is no recurrence in the future.

On Détente: When Russia first agreed to the principle of détente, the Soviet Government was operating out of weakness. Now, it's operating from a position of supreme confidence and strength. I think our position has weakened. And one of the reasons is that we have yielded to Russia on every controversial negotiation point. Détente is a very good arrangement if it means



"Détente isn't a dirty word to me.... I think the present arrangement is advantageous to mankind in the long run. At least we're trying."
—Morris Udall

Morris Udall
Democrat

Running for President seems to have taken its toll of Morris K. Udall. The 6-5, wiry Arizona Congressman looked pale and weary the day we interviewed him in his office on Capitol Hill.

Udall arrived 40 minutes late, telling his secretary he had decided to have lunch first. Then his opening remark was, "I'm very pressed for time—I have a plane to catch." He seemed distracted during the interview, constantly scribbling notes and seldom looking up to meet our interviewer's gaze. He did say: "It's O.K., I can do two things at the same time. You just keep asking the questions."

Udall was a man of few words—painfully few. He answered some 32 questions in as many minutes, and he frequently brushed aside complicated questions with a request that after the interview we check out his "position paper" on the subject.

On Crime: I believe the emphasis on "toughness" in public debate over law enforcement is misplaced. The U.S. already has the harshest criminal laws of any advanced country, yet crime goes up. I think our great failure has not been in severity of punishment, but in sureness and swiftness of arrest, trial and sentencing. To make substantial inroads against crime will require efforts on many fronts: full employment so that people are not drawn to crime out of poverty, frustration or boredom; a decent economic climate so that big cities aren't forced to lay off policemen; stricter guidelines on sentencing to reduce the inequities that cause cynicism among convicts; more courts, prosecutors and defense lawyers so that cases need not be plea-bargained simply because it is too time-consuming to bring people to trial; focused enforcement on the most terrorizing crimes, such as mugging and rape, and a penal system that prepares offenders for useful post-prison lives rather than teaching them to be craftier criminals. I don't think the Federal Government can do much to reduce crime. It's mostly a state and local problem. But the Federal Government could put the pressure on Turkey and Mexico as far as the drug traffic is concerned, and they could experiment and innovate to show the local agencies the way.

On Secretary Kissinger: I think history is going to be kind to him on détente, the opening of China and skillful personalized diplomacy. There's no one very much better than he at dealing with heads of state as a negotiator. I think history is not going to be sympathetic about his wiretapping his staff, lying to Congress and the nation on Cambodia, his involvement in the overthrow of Chile and his secretive kind of one-man shop tactics.

On Military Spending: I think we ought to cut our military spending by 10 percent. We've got too many generals and admirals, too many overseas bases, too many troops. There are too many civilians who aren't directly connected with the fighting function—who run headquarters and PXs and things that aren't connected with the muscle of the military establishment. As far as weapons are concerned, I would advocate the building of simpler, tougher, more easily replaceable tanks, ships and airplanes, not the new, exotic weapons we're building now. I think we ought to look at whether we really need 14 aircraft carriers that are expensive to build and operate. There was a pretty good study done last year that shows we added three infantry divisions and we had two carrier task forces that we maintain for the sole purpose of fighting an Asian land war. I think the last thing on earth the American people want is an Asian land war.

On the CIA: In order to make the CIA more responsive to our elected Government officials, we need a good, tight, balanced oversight committee from the House and Senate; we need a President who's got a passion for civil liberties and understands the needs of the intelligence network, but is not willing to let the CIA abuse the rights of other people, spy on American citizens or try to run the world.

On Busing: Busing is a tough social problem that we've dumped on courts and schools, and communication, trade, openness, tourism, student exchanges, cultural knowledge. But yielding on trade negotiations and neglecting our natural allies because of our preoccupation with Russia are things that concern me.

On the U.N.: I think we ought to look at the U.N. as a forum for presenting the American position. Some functions of the U.N. are very crucial to us—those concerning the international monetary fund, trade agreements, freedom of the seas, access to commodities, population problems, food-shortage problems. The General Assembly is quite often irresponsible. But its irresponsibility derives from the lack of substance effected by its decisions. I think if everybody in the U.N. felt, "When we pass a resolution, it will have some effect," the U.N. would become much more responsible about its decisions. . . . As President, I would adopt a position that the ambassador to the U.N. would be the most important ambassador of all.

On the Third World: We have no comprehensive policy towards South American countries, Central American countries or the countries of Africa. Most of those countries feel that we don't care about them. In the last few years I've been in 11 foreign nations. Often I've had the opportunity to spend a day with a nation's president, prime minister or one of its top ambassadors. Invariably, they say to me, "We haven't had a friend in the White House since John Kennedy died." It wouldn't take much to restore that kind of personal relationship and mutual respect: frequent visits by the Secretary of State or other top leaders; appointments of qualified ambassadors for a change; the visit of a President's family.

On Abortion: I do not favor a constitutional amendment to prohibit abortions. I also do not favor a constitutional amendment that would give states a local option—those are the two pro-

It is FAMILY WEEKLY's belief that, no matter who wins or withdraws, the ideas expressed by the Presidential hopefuls of Campaign '76 deserve a longer, more thoughtful life than a mere candidacy in which to be measured. We went to most of these men for their stands on the issues. Today: Carter and Udall. In future issues: the others.

they're just not equipped to handle it. Legislators and mayors and all kinds of community institutions need to be involved in this problem. I think housing is a key part of it. Our long-range goal ought to be stable, integrated communities so that neighborhood schools can exist.

On Abortion: I personally don't advocate or favor abortion as a standard thing. But if you're going to say, as some do, that every abortion must be prohibited or those involved will go to jail, you've got to be prepared to answer the worst case. The worst case might be that your 14-year-old daughter is assaulted by some criminal who is diseased, and the doctor tells you that the fetus is going to be born crippled and malformed, yet the girl has to go ahead and have the baby. You've got to be prepared to say, even in that case, that abortion is against the law unless the mother's life is in danger. And that simply doesn't make sense. You shouldn't try to create laws that you're not going to enforce.

On Education: There's a lot of ferment in the educational community, but I think we'll be seeing changing patterns in the next few years. The whole development of the community college system has recognized that not everyone fits into the four-year college mold. We need not only college graduates, we need people from technical and trade schools. I think we're moving away from the idea that a person isn't successful if he doesn't have a college degree, and we're going to have to encourage pride in the need for good carpenters, good repairmen, servicemen and technicians of all kinds.

The world's most incredible scissors at an incredible price! The idea originated with the Scandinavians — why not a scissors anatomically designed to fit the human hand instead of fight it . . . why not make it out of a cushion-y plastic that would rest rather than tire the hand? The brilliant result — a breakthrough in scissor design . . . is still selling in some better stores for $8 and more!

An Exciting New Dimension in Scissor Performance —

You can whiz through the heaviest of velvets to the most gossamer of silks as fast, as perfectly as a professional dressmaker. You can turn corners, make circles, cut angles, zoom straight-as-an-arrow along a table edge so easily it's like the scissors is cutting all by itself (your fingers are along for the ride!)

And you can sas-shay through tricky patterns with incredible ease and precision, end your paper "rip offs" forever — cut coupons and recipes without ruining the rest of the paper! Quality-crafted with the famous Scandinavian features including soft plastic orange handle, and stainless steel blades, 8¼" long. Special safety "points" make it safe for the children's crafts, too! Weighs only 3 ounces. Order now — the sharpest buy of your life at ONLY $1.99.

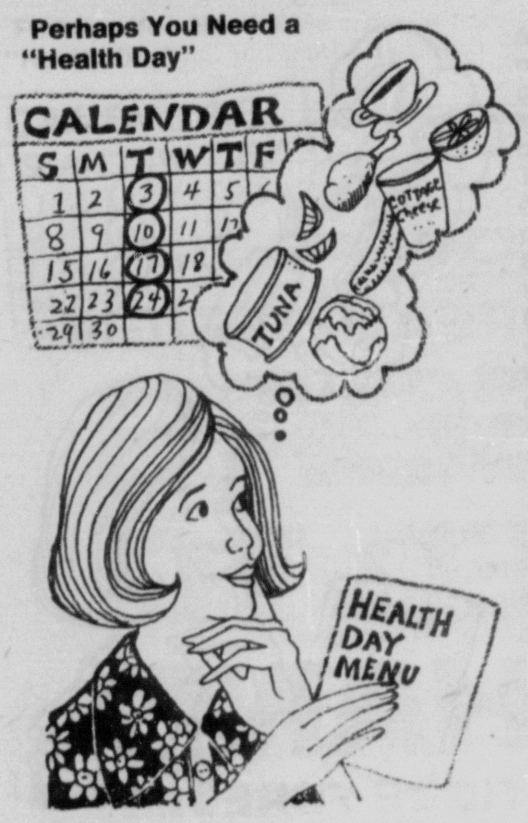
The Diet Watch

Perhaps You Need a "Health Day"



A good way to keep your weight down, or lower it, is to assign yourself a one-day-a-week "health day." Pick, say, Tuesday, as your regular "health day," and eat the same foods every Tuesday. What foods? They're the choices you select from among your personal, favorite, low-calorie foods, and you eat them in quantities that are 500 calories or less for the day. One person's "health day" may begin with a half-cup of low-cal cottage cheese and half an orange, plus black coffee and a vitamin pill (125 calories). Lunch may consist of a whole can of tuna fish (drained) on lettuce leaves, with lemon wedges and a cup of tea (220 calories). And dinner may be a small piece of broiled chicken (three ounces, plus bone—and no skin, please!) along with a sizable salad of greens, cucumber, radishes, dressed with wine vinegar (150 calories). Total for the day: 495 calories. A once-a-week diet such as this gives you plenty of protein, good roughage, lots of vitamins—and a minimum of calories! —By Harriet La Barre

People and You

Should Your Doctor Be Your Friend?

It's true that a doctor's "bedside manner" is important. But many people struggle with unsatisfactory medical care because they don't go beyond personality questions. University research reveals that even well-educated people are often "highly uninformed" as to whether they are being treated by general practitioners or specialists. As a result, people often wander from doctor to doctor trying to solve a medical problem without ever asking who specializes in that particular area. For example, if you have a stubborn skin ailment, you don't need a "good doctor," you need a good skin specialist. Also, your physician's conscientious interest in you and your family may work against you. The university study mentioned above indicates that knowing your doctor on a friendly personal basis may lower the quality of care you receive. When the doctor had a close relationship with the patient, or when the patient was a person of local importance, doctors were slow to suggest specialist attention. Surprisingly, when doctors had no personal interest in the patient, the sick people frequently received the "best care" because the physicians rather quickly sent them off to the specialist they required. —By Shirley Sloan Fader posals that have been made. But under the present Supreme Court ruling, I'll do everything I can, as President, to minimize the need for abortions with a comprehensive federal program, established by law, that concerns education in family planning, access to contraceptives by those who believe in their use—including minors, by the way—and better adoptive procedures. There's no easy answer to abortion. They'll still be debating that issue 50 years from now. But the present Supreme Court ruling says that during the first 13 weeks a mother is entitled to make that decision. I don't think that will change.

On Education: To express the needs of future education in a few words, I'd say the key phrase is: individualization of instruction—that is, treating children as individuals. Throughout my four years as Governor, everything I did in education was designed to treat each child differently, to give each one a chance to progress at his or her own rate. I'm generally in favor of cutting down on the number of federal agencies, but one new agency I would consider creating would be a separate Department of Education. I don't think we'll ever have adequate attention paid to education while it's buried under health and welfare in one oversized department.

On the Role of the Attorney General: We ought to get the Attorney General out of politics. When I was a child and a President ran a successful campaign, the campaign manager became the Postmaster General. Nowadays, the campaign manager becomes the Attorney General. That's a cabinet position where, in my opinion, we ought to have a nonpartisan political figure because that person is responsible for administration of equitable and fair laws in an enthusiastic way. I think the Attorney General should be appointed for a limited period of time —say five to seven years—and given the same independence Leon Jaworski had as special Watergate prosecutor.

On the Economy: The major thrust of my administration will be toward employment. While I don't think the Federal Government should assume responsibility for providing the majority of jobs, I do think it can work to strengthen the private sector . . . I would do everything I could to keep interest rates low . . . I believe in developing new industrial prospects, like a solar heating industry . . . I also believe in the aggressive sale of American products overseas. And we should remove the incentives, tax and otherwise, that have encouraged American corporations to manufacture products in foreign countries while their former employees in this country are out of work.

Third World nations will be crucial in the years ahead. We will be dependent on many Third World nations for energy and raw materials. The international monetary system needs comprehensive reform, as do trade relations. The control of environmental hazards, such as irrevocable damage to the oceans or to the climate, can only be handled on a global basis and will require the participation and cooperation of all the nations of the world. The same is true for the control of nuclear proliferation and the exploding conventional arms race. With all these problems, it is imperative that we begin to develop better relations with Third World nations.

On Relations With China: The Chinese entered into this arrangement with Kissinger and Nixon, not out of any love for us. It was in their hard-boiled, hard-nosed national interest. They were fearful of the Soviets—almost paranoid about them, in fact. The Chinese saw the U.S. as a way to counter the Soviet threat. And that is what's keeping good relations between us. I think we ought to get as much out of this relationship as we can. I think it's critical to world peace that we develop a relationship with both the Soviets and the Chinese.

On Détente: Détente isn't a dirty word to me. The essence of détente is arms control—the obligation of the superpowers and the nuclear world to cooperate and discuss arms limitation, consult and exchange ideas, products and technology. I think we're better off—the world is better off—if we can build a web, a network of relationships. I think the present arrangement is advantageous to mankind in the long run. At least we're trying. We had a SALT I agreement, and we're in the process of getting a SALT II agreement. That's the most vital aspect of détente. Sure, I think that Kissinger, Nixon and Ford haven't been very smart in their dealings because they've given away too much to the other side. But the overriding issue is that we keep in close contact with the superpowers in this nuclear age.

On the Challenges America Faces: The crucial challenge of the next few decades will be to insure that this Age of Scarcity doesn't become an Age of Poverty. The way to meet that challenge is not through the cruel self-delusion of would-be leaders who claim we can turn back the clock but by facing up to this new world and understanding its meaning: the interrelationship between energy, the environment and the economy; the difference between living wastefully and living well; the lesson that the "consent of the governed" is not a blank check but a credit card, subject to revocation.

People Quiz

By John E. Gibson

On Getting People to Do What You Want

True or False? When you're bargaining with someone over price, it's important to make your initial demands modest and realistic—otherwise the other person is likely to react with hostility. (See number 3.)

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. When you're trying to talk someone into doing something, keep your voice low and confidential. If he has to lean forward to hear what you're saying, so much the better.
2. When asking someone to do you a favor, if your request happens to embarrass or disconcert him, it's likely to ruin your chances completely.
3. When you're bargaining with someone over price, it's important to make your initial demands modest and realistic—otherwise the other person is likely to react with hostility.
4. When a person says to you, "You know, I really feel guilty about that..." it is one of the best times to ask him a favor.
5. The person who is most resistant to persuasion is the individual who is both highly emotional and highly intelligent.

ANSWERS

1. False. You'll be far more effective if you step up the vocal volume and come on loud and clear. In University of Iowa studies, 900 recorded messages were rated on a persuasion scale, assessing the degree of convincingness. The highest- and lowest-rated persuasive messages were then checked for volume (loud, medium or soft). Results indicated that "loudness is a characteristic of persuasion."

2. False. If the person happens to be embarrassed, that's unfortunate—but only because it makes him uncomfortable. It shouldn't hurt your chances. In fact, findings of a Boston University study have demonstrated that when a person is embarrassed, he is much more apt to comply with a request. And other psychological studies have shown that "embarrassed individuals seek the positive experience of helping someone in order to relieve the discomfort of their embarrassment."
3. False. Psychologists have observed that bargainers achieve a better outcome when they make extreme rather than moderate initial demands. This permits the bargainer to make gradual concessions. Each concession the other party is permitted to "win" has a warming effect on his ego, subtly instilling the illusion that he is a pretty sharp trader and has gained the advantage over his adversary.
4. True. Studies have shown that when a person is feeling guilty about something, he is not only more compliant, he actually wants to do something helpful, and will sometimes do such a deed voluntarily, without being asked. The person with guilt feelings seeks out a means of expiating his guilt. You help him accomplish this by the simple act of letting him do you a favor or service.
5. False. Studies at McMaster University (Ontario) have shown that people who are both highly intelligent and highly emotional tend to be pushovers for a persuasive argument. The reason? The investigators point out that "high emotional responsiveness may interfere with the adequate expression of high intelligence." Such people can be talked into doing things by people who aren't nearly as intelligent as they are.

No formulas to follow, no special foods to prepare, nothing to count or weigh. Best of all, the Slim-Through-Sleep method eliminates the single greatest cause for weight-loss failure — Will Power. That's right, the hardest part of any diet — is the fight to avoid food, and STS makes painful will power a thing of the past.

Almost immediately you will begin losing weight more easily than ever before in your life . . . effortless weight loss that your friends, even your own family, will notice right away!

Yes, even if every other method you've tried has failed, you can now lose every pound you want to — and never gain it back!

STS has worked near miracles with thousands of people. (Just look at some of the pictures and comments on this page). With the Slim-Through-Sleep Plan you won't feel the least bit deprived. It won't be a matter of pushing yourself away from the dinner table . . . or doing strenuous exercises . . . or substituting foods.

5 MINUTES A DAY FOR 5 DAYS AND POUNDS START TO DISAPPEAR. For just five minutes before you go to sleep, follow the STS Plan . . . that's all. While you are sleeping, it's actually working.

STS will actually leave you feeling more relaxed, free of tension and free of those unhealthy EXTRA pounds you've been carrying around for so long.

Before you know it, your spirits will soar to new heights. You'll have the self-confidence that comes from being pleased with your appearance. You will look and feel the way you deserve to, perhaps the way you thought was impossible before.

No "starvation," no substitutes. Eat every food you eat now.

Everything that has been unpleasant about losing weight before no longer exists. If you love mashed potatoes smothered in gravy . . . rich cheesecake . . . whipped cream on your desserts, you'll still be able to enjoy these and every delicious food you have always loved. Never again will you have to contend with pills that leave you jittery; exercises that leave you exhausted and achy; food cravings that have you climbing the walls. Spend just 5 minutes with the STS plan the first evening you get it and we promise you results in weight loss that will startle you. Without suffering a moment of anxiety you will shed pound after pound quickly and effortlessly — and you'll never regain that weight again.

Sandra Glass lost 99 pounds! "I had let myself go to pot, weightwise, and now I have been able to bring my weight down to the right level and bring up my spirits and my life. I previously weighed 241 pounds and now I weigh a gorgeous 142."

Domenick Griesi, teenager, lost 52 pounds! "I weighed 211 pounds and am now down to 159. I have tried other methods to lose weight, but have never been able to stick with them. Being a teenager, you have no idea how much happier I am now."

STS Method Sweeping Europe, Now Available For The First Time In This Country

Within the past year, the STS Method has become an enormous success in France, Switzerland, Germany and other European countries. Thousands and thousands of overweight Europeans have discovered that this is the only method that provides any meaningful, permanent weight loss. In development in this country for over 16 years, only now has this wonder-working method become available in such an easy-to-use plan . . . a foolproof plan . . . that could be considered the most important weight-loss discovery in over 50 years!

American Consumer has been involved in researching weight-loss concepts for the past three years. Our customers have taught us that what is required is an effective, quick and safe weight-loss plan. We have spent the last year in negotiation to secure the STS program exclusively for our mail order public. We feel the results — the fantastic STS Program — has been worth the effort.

Here's What Users Of The STS Method Have To Say:

Lee G., 25 lbs. in 1½ months: "It is such an easy and non-frustrating way to lose weight. This is the best method I have found in 15 years of dieting."

Father Pat B., 30 lbs. in 2 months: "I recommend this program enthusiastically to anyone who seriously wants to lose weight."

Terry W., 22 lbs. in 2 months: "I tried just about every diet or pill and nothing ever helped like this. I can face myself in a mirror again."

Sarah P., 33 lbs. in 3 months: "I feel in a wonderful frame of mind, plenty of pep and energy and ambition."

Barbara B., 22 lbs.: "Thanks so much for the new 'skinny' me. No more diet pill blues or starvation cranks. You've helped me become a happy, slim female again."

Pat T., 30 lbs. in 3 months: 3 months ago, I started and not to sound like an ad, I really am a new person. Very happy!"

Harry C., 51 lbs. in 2½ months: "There are no nasty after effects. I've been on about five or six diets, all of which involved medication, and I always lost weight. But I didn't like the feeling. The drugs would make me grouchy after the pills wore off . . . Besides, I always went up again after I stopped using the pills."

Why The STS Plan Is Better Than Any So-called Diet You've Ever Tried

- Diet pills make you tense and nervous — STS leaves you relaxed and energetic
- Diet Plans require change in eating habits — with STS you eat all the foods you ate before
- Almost every weight-loss method requires will power — STS eliminates that painful barrier
- Other plans require a different regimen for active, non-active, young and old — STS works remarkable results for everyone, including teenagers and children
- Other methods require a change in dining out and party habits — STS doesn't change the food you eat regardless of the occasion
- Other methods have a yo-yo effect, weight comes off, and goes right back on — with STS weight stays off permanently

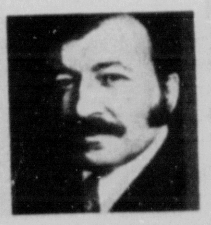
The only thing now between you and weight-loss success is the effort it takes to mail the coupon below. Do it today and you won't be sorry. We guarantee it!



Meet the Creator Of The STS Method. Frank Rocco, R. H., is a world-renowned registered therapist, and his clinical success with people who had never before been able to lose weight has been phenomenal.

Mr. Rocco's contention is: "Any person can lose weight with this plan as long as they have the sincere desire to lose. That is the only prerequisite. They can lose as much as they want, five pounds to a hundred pounds, and there is no medication involved." He has proven this in case after case, where he has given new hope and new happiness to people who had tried dozens of other weight-loss methods without lasting success.

Frank Rocco is recognized as a major authority in his field and has been the subject of many newspaper articles and television shows.

I don't judge my cigarette by its length.

There's only one reason to smoke: taste.
Not length. Not looks. Winston Super King gives me the real Winston taste I like and the extra length I want. So I get as much taste per millimeter as any cigarette can give. For me, Winston is for real.

THE CONCORDE CUT
It's* controversial, too!

Hairodynamics: A hairdo that is taking off in London is the Concorde cut, modeled after the supersonic plane that has caused so much excitement on both sides of the Atlantic. Says the creator of this new hairstyle, London hairdresser Roy Cartmell: "The jet's slim, sleek elegance was the inspiration for my design. You know, it took me as long to invent this new look as it will for the jet to fly from London to New York —3½ hours!" Not only is the future of the jet still very much up in the air, but the "nose" of the haircut may jeopardize the wearer's safety. It's difficult to see under the weight of all that hairodynamics.

CHARLES LINDBERGH
First came the rules

Was Charles Lindbergh a prude? "Barnstormers were in some ways the pop stars of their time, and although Lindbergh had no objections to the girls who swirled around his plane, he never allowed any of them to come near him. What would he have talked to them about anyway? He knew nothing about jazz—his favorite song was still 'Home on the Range.' He couldn't dance and he didn't have the time or money to go to the movies. The tall, thin-as-a-lath, dashingly handsome young man was something of a prude. It was not simply that he was an abstainer from alcohol, tobacco and other stimulants. He had solemnly tried whiskey, beer, cigarettes and coffee, and had subsequently eschewed them because he considered them all physically weakening. He drew up a list of rules by which he felt he should live. He once told a journalist, 'I drew up a list of character factors—qualities like alertness, ambition, manliness and precision—there were 65 in all—and every night I would read off the list, and those which I had fulfilled satisfactorily during the day, I would mark with a red cross; those which I had violated that day, I would mark with a black cross. I began to compare those red and black marks from month to month and year to year. I was glad to know that there was an improvement as I grew older.'" From "Lindbergh: A Biography," by Leonard Mosley (Doubleday, $12.95).

Masquerading as a conservative: Actor James Earl Jones says that's what he did back in the 50's, "so as not to get involved in the fury of McCarthyism and fear that was rampant. Many of us did all kinds of conservative things to 'cover' ourselves. I, for one, converted to Catholicism and voted for Eisenhower. Those were actions that were uncharacteristic, but most of us would do anything to survive and keep safe. We struck an apathetic pose, but we didn't stop caring. Good things can come out of supposedly apathetic times, like the 50's or the 70's. We learn to be more self-sufficient. Nixon left us with a murky pond; we don't know what we want from a leader or in a leader. That's healthy as far as I'm concerned. We have to stop looking for a father figure in Government. Jerry Ford is reigning as a leaderless President; we ought to breathe easier because of his lackluster politics." James Earl Jones is currently starring in "The River Niger," with Cicely Tyson.

ARMOUR'S ARMOURY

GONE, ANYHOW

Where do pens and pencils go?
That's something I would like to know.
One minute they are all around,
The next, not even one is found.
(The minute they're around is when
I need no pencil, need no pen.
The minute they are out of sight
Is when I have the need to write.)
Do pens and pencils in the night
Sprout little wings and then take flight?
Among the things I do not know
Is where the pens and pencils go.
